VEDIC INDEX OF NAMES AND SUBJECTS.

Puruṣa, or Pūruṣa, is the generic term for 'man' in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later.<sup>2</sup> Man is composed of five parts according to the Atharvaveda,<sup>3</sup> or of six according to the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>4</sup> or of sixteen,<sup>5</sup> or of twenty,<sup>6</sup> or of twenty-one,<sup>7</sup> or of twenty-four,<sup>8</sup> or of twenty-five,<sup>9</sup> all more or less fanciful enumerations. Man is the first of animals,<sup>10</sup> but also essentially an animal (see Paśu). The height of a man is given in the Kātyāyana Śrauta Sūtra<sup>11</sup> as four Aratnis ('cubits'), each of two Padas ('feet'), each of twelve Aṅgulis ('finger's breadths'); and the term Puruṣa itself is found earlier<sup>12</sup> as a measure of length.

Puruṣa is also applied to denote the length of a man's life, a 'generation',<sup>13</sup> the 'pupil' in the eye;<sup>14</sup> and in the grammatical literature the 'person' of the verb.<sup>15</sup>

Puruṣanti is a name that occurs twice in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> in the first passage denoting a protégé of the Aśvins, in the second a patron who gave presents to one of the Vedic singers. In both cases the name is joined with that of Dhvasanti or Dhvasra. The presumption from the manner in which these three names are mentioned is that they designate men, but the grammatical form of the words might equally well be feminine. Females must be meant, if the evidence of the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>2</sup> is to be taken as decisive, for the form of the first of the two names there occurring, Dhvasre Puruṣantī, 'Dhvasrā and Puruṣanti,' is exclusively feminine, though here as well as elsewhere Sāyaṇa<sup>3</sup> interprets the names as masculines. See also Taranta and Purumīha.

Purū-ravas is the name of a hero in a hymn of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> containing a curious dialogue between him and a nymph, Urvaśī, an Apsaras. He is also mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>2</sup> where several verses of the Rigvedic dialogue find a setting in a continuous story. In the later literature he is recognized as a king.<sup>3</sup> His name is perhaps intended in one other passage of the Rigveda.<sup>4</sup> It is impossible to say whether he is a mythical figure pure and simple, or really an ancient king. His epithet, Aiḷa,<sup>5</sup> 'descendant of Idā' (a sacrificial goddess), is certainly in favour of the former alternative.

Purūru is the name of a poet, an Ātreya, in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> according to Ludwig.<sup>2</sup> But the only form of the word found, purūruṇā, seems merely an adverb meaning 'far and wide.'

Puro-dhā denotes the office of Purohita, 'domestic priest.' Its mention as early as the Atharvaveda,<sup>1</sup> and often later,<sup>2</sup> shows that the post was a fully recognized and usual one.

Puro-'nuvākya (introductory verse to be recited) is the technical term for the address to a god inviting him to partake of the offering; it was followed by the Yājya, which accompanied the actual oblation.<sup>1</sup> Such addresses are not unknown, but are rare, according to Oldenberg,<sup>2</sup> in the Rigveda; subsequently they are regular, the word itself occurring in the later Saṃhitās<sup>3</sup> and the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>4</sup>

Puro-rue is the technical description of certain Nivid verses which were recited at the morning libation in the Ājya and Praṭga ceremonies before the hymn (sūkta) of the litany or its parts. It occurs in the later Saṃhitās and the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>1</sup>

Cf. Hillebrandt, Ritualliteratur, 102.

Puro-vāta, the 'east wind,' is mentioned in the later Saṃhitās and the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>1</sup> Geldner<sup>2</sup> thinks it merely means the wind preceding the rains.

maṇa, i. 5, 2, 18; Chāndogya Upaniṣad, ii. 3, 1, etc.

Puro-hita ('placed in front,' 'appointed') is the name of a priest in the Rīgveda<sup>1</sup> and later.<sup>2</sup> The office of Purohita is called Purohiti<sup>3</sup> and Purodhā. It is clear that the primary function of the Purohita was that of 'domestic priest' of a king, or perhaps a great noble; his quite exceptional position is shown by the fact that only one Purohita seems ever to be mentioned in Vedic literature.<sup>4</sup> Examples of Purohitas in the Rīgveda are Viśvāmitra<sup>5</sup> or Vasiṣṭha<sup>6</sup> in the service of the Bharata king, Sudās, of the Trtsu family; the Purohita of Kuruśravāṇa;<sup>7</sup> and Devāpi, the Purohita of Śantanu.<sup>8</sup> The Purohita was in all religious matters the alter ego of the king. In the ritual<sup>9</sup> it is laid down that a king must have a Purohita, else the gods will not accept his offerings. He ensures the king's safety and victory in battle by his prayers;<sup>10</sup> he procures

<sup>4</sup> Geldner, Vedische Studien, 2, 144, thinks that several Purohitas were possible, quoting Sāyaṇa, on Rv. x. 57, 1, who gives the tale of the Gaupāyanas and King Asamāti from the Śatyāyanaka, and comparing the case of Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra as Purohitas, probably contemporaneously, of Sudās. But that the two were contemporaneous is most unlikely, especially if we adopt the very probable view of Hopkins (Journal of the American Oriental Society, 15, 260 et seq.) that Viśvāmitra was with the ten kings (Rv. vii. 18) when they unsuccessfully attacked Sudās.

The other narrative has, as Oldenberg, Religion des Veda, 375, n. 3, observes, a markedly fictitious character; while every other passage that mentions a Purohita speaks of him in the singular, and as there was only one Brahman priest at the sacrifice, so the Purohita acted as Brahman.

<sup>10</sup> See Av. iii. 19; Rv. vii. 18, 13, from which Geldner, op. cit., 2, 135, n. 3, concludes that the priest prayed in the Sabhā, 'house of assembly,' while the king fought on the field of battle. See Āśvalāyana Gṛhya Sūtra, iii. 12, 19, 20. Cf. Pūru, n. 2.

the fall of rain for the crops;<sup>11</sup> he is the flaming fire that guards the kingdom.<sup>12</sup> Divodāsa in trouble is rescued by Bharadvāja;<sup>13</sup> and King Tryarūṇa Traidhātva Aikṣvāka reproaches his Purohita, Vṛśa Jāna, when his car runs over a Brahmin boy and kills him.<sup>14</sup> The close relation of king and Purohita is illustrated by the case of Kutsa Aurava, who slew his Purohita, Upagu Sauśravasa, for disloyalty in serving Indra, to whom Kutsa was hostile.<sup>15</sup> Other disputes between kings and priests who officiated for them are those of Janamejaya and the Kaśyapas, and of Viśvantara and the Śyāparṇas;<sup>16</sup> and between Asamāti and the Gaupāyanas.<sup>17</sup> In some cases one Purohita served more than one king; for example, Devabhāga Śrautarṣa was the Purohita of the Kurus and the Śrñjayas at the same time,<sup>18</sup> and Jala Jātūkarṇya was the Purohita of the kings of Kāśī, Videha, and Kosala.<sup>19</sup>

There is no certain proof that the office of Purohita was hereditary in a family, though it probably was so.<sup>20</sup> At any rate, it seems clear from the relations of the Purohita with King Kuruśravāṇa, and with his son Upamaśravas,<sup>21</sup> that a king would keep on the Purohita of his father.

Zimmer<sup>22</sup> thinks that the king might act as his own Purohita, as shown by the case of King Viśvantara, who sacrificed without the help of the Śyāparṇas,<sup>23</sup> and that a Purohita need not be a priest, as shown by the case of Devāpi and Śantanu.<sup>24</sup> But neither opinion seems to be justified. It is not said that

<sup>18</sup> Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, ii. 4, 4, 5. According to Sāyaṇa, on Rv. i. 81, 3, it was Rāhūgaṇa Gotama who was Purohita; but this is hardly more than a mere blunder. See Geldner, Vedische Studien, 3, 152; Weber, Indische Studien, 2, 9, n.

Viśvantara sacrificed without priests, while Devāpi is not regarded as a king until the Nirukta,<sup>25</sup> and there is no reason to suppose that Yāska's view expressed in that work is correct.

According to Geldner,<sup>26</sup> the Purohita from the beginning acted as the Brahman priest in the sacrificial ritual, being there the general superintendent of the sacrifice. In favour of this view, he cites the fact that Vasiṣṭha is mentioned both as Purohita<sup>27</sup> and as Brahman:<sup>28</sup> at the sacrifice of Śunaḥśepa he served as Brahman,<sup>29</sup> but he was the Purohita of Sudās;<sup>30</sup> Bṛhaspati is called the Purohita<sup>31</sup> and the Brahman<sup>32</sup> of the gods; and the Vasiṣṭhas who are Purohitas are also the Brahmans at the sacrifice.<sup>33</sup> It is thus clear that the Brahman was often the Purohita; and it was natural that this should be the case when once the Brahman's place became, as it did in the later ritual, the most important position at the sacrifice.<sup>34</sup> But the Brahman can hardly be said to have held this place in the earlier ritual; Oldenberg<sup>35</sup> seems to be right in holding that the Purohita was originally the Hotṛ priest, the singer par excellence, when he took any part at all in the ritual of the great sacrifices with the Rtvijṣ. So Devāpi seems clearly to have

Gopatha Brāhmaṇa, ii. 2, 13. The Atharvan literature (Bloomfield, Hymns of the Atharvaveda, lx, lxi) requires a follower of that Veda to act as Brahman, and the spells of the Atharvan are, in fact, closely allied to the spells of the Purohita as represented in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, viii. 24-28. been a Hotṛ;<sup>36</sup> Agni is at once Purohita<sup>37</sup> and Hotṛ;<sup>38</sup> and the 'two divine Hotṛs' referred to in the Āpri litanies are also called the 'two Purohitas.'<sup>39</sup> Later, no doubt, when the priestly activity ceased to centre in the song, the Purohita, with his skill in magic, became the Brahman, who also required magic to undo the errors of the sacrifice.<sup>40</sup>

There is little doubt that in the original growth of the priesthood the Purohita played a considerable part. In historical times he represented the real power of the kingship, and may safely be deemed to have exercised great influence in all public affairs, such as the administration of justice and the king's conduct of business. But it is not at all probable that the Purohita represents, as Roth<sup>41</sup> and Zimmer<sup>42</sup> thought, the source which gave rise to caste. The priestly class is already in existence in the Rigveda (see Varṇa).

Pulikaya. See Purikaya.

Pulikā seems to designate some kind of bird in the Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā (iii. 14, 5). The name appears in the form of Kulikā in the Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā (xxiv. 24).

Puluṣa Prācīna-yogya ('descendant of Prācīnayoga') is the name of a teacher, a pupil of Dṛti Aindroti Śaunaka, in a Vaṃśa (list of teachers) of the Jaiminiya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa (iii. 40, 2). He taught Pauluṣi Satyayajña.

Puṣkara is the name in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later<sup>2</sup> of the blue lotus flower. The Atharvaveda<sup>3</sup> mentions its sweet perfume. The lotus grew in lakes, which were thence called puṣkariṇī, 'lotus-bearing.'<sup>4</sup> That the flower was early used for personal adornment is shown by an epithet of the Aśvins, 'lotus-crowned' (puṣkara-sraj).<sup>5</sup>

Presumably because of its likeness in shape to the flower of the lotus, the bowl of the ladle is called Puṣkara, perhaps already in the Rigveda,<sup>6</sup> and certainly in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.<sup>7</sup> Moreover, according to the Nirukta,<sup>8</sup> Puṣkara means 'water,' a sense actually found in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>1</sup> vi. 16, 13; vii. 33, 11, may be so taken, though Roth, St. Petersburg Dictionary, s.v. 3, and Geldner, Rigveda, Glossar, 112, prefer to see in these passages a reference to the bowl of the sacrificial ladle.

Pūtika is the name of a plant often mentioned<sup>1</sup> as a substitute for the Soma plant. It is also given in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā<sup>2</sup> as a means of making milk curdle, being an alternative to the bark of the Butea frondosa (parṇa-valka). It is usually identified with the Guilandina Bonduc, but Hillebrandt<sup>3</sup> makes it out to be the Basella Cordifolia.

Pūru is the name of a people and their king in the Rigveda. They are mentioned with the Anus, Druhyus, Turvaśas, and Yadus in one passage.<sup>1</sup> They also occur as enemies of the Tr̥tsus in the hymn of Sudās' victory.<sup>2</sup> In another

<sup>2</sup> vii. 18, 13. Cf. Turvaśa. Apparently, as Hopkins, Journal of the American Oriental Society, 15, 263, n., and Geldner, Vedische Studien, 2, 135, think, in this verse the words jeṣma Pūruṃ vidathe mṛdhravācam refer to the Pūru king and to the priest Viśvāmitra, who prayed for the defeat of Sudās, though in vain. Hopkins seems to take the words vidathe mṛdhravācam generally as 'the false speaker in the assembly'; but, according to Geldner, the meaning intended is that, while the king fought, the Purohita prayed in the Sabhā, or meeting-house of the people.

hymn<sup>3</sup> Agni of the Bharatas is celebrated as victorious over the Pūrus, probably a reference to the same decisive overthrow. On the other hand, victories of the Pūrus over the aborigines seem to be referred to in several passages.<sup>4</sup>

The great kings of the Pūrus were Purukutsa and his son Trasadasyu, whose name bears testimony to his prowess against aboriginal foes, while a later prince was Tpkṣi Trāsadasyava.

In the Rigveda the Pūrus are expressly<sup>5</sup> mentioned as on the Sarasvatī. Zimmer<sup>6</sup> thinks that the Sindhu (Indus) is meant in this passage. But Ludwig<sup>7</sup> and Hillebrandt<sup>8</sup> with much greater probability think that the eastern Sarasvatī in Kurukṣetra is meant. This view accords well with the sudden disappearance of the name of the Pūrus from Vedic tradition, a disappearance accounted for by Oldenberg's<sup>9</sup> conjecture that the Pūrus became part of the great Kuru people, just as Turvaśa and Krivi disappear from the tradition on their being merged in the Pañcāla nation. Trāsadasyava, the patronymic of Kuruśravaṇa in the Rigveda,<sup>10</sup> shows that the royal families of the Kurus and the Pūrus were allied by inter-marriage.

Hillebrandt,<sup>11</sup> admitting that the Pūrus in later times lived in the eastern country round the Sarasvatī, thinks that in earlier days they were to be found to the west of the Indus with Divodāsa. This theory must fall with the theory that Divodāsa was in the far west. It might, however, be held to be supported by the fact that Alexander found a Πῶρος—that is, a Paurava prince on the Hydaspes,<sup>12</sup> a sort of half-way locality between the Sarasvatī and the West. But it is quite simple to suppose either that the Hydaspes was the earlier home of the Pūrus, where some remained after the others had wandered east, or that the later Paurava represents a successful onslaught upon the west from the east.

In several other passages of the Rigveda<sup>13</sup> the Pūrus as a people seem to be meant. The Nirukta<sup>14</sup> recognizes the general sense of 'man,' but in no passage is this really necessary or even probable. So utterly, however, is the tradition lost that the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>15</sup> explains Pūru in the Rigveda<sup>16</sup> as an Asura Rakṣas; it is only in the Epic that Pūru revives as the name of a son of Yayāti and Śarmiṣṭhā.<sup>17</sup>

<sup>13</sup> In Rv. i. 36, 1, Pūrūṇām might be read for purūṇām, with improvement in the sense. In i. 63, 7, there is a reference to the Pūru king, Purukutsa, and Sudās, but in what relation is uncertain (see Purukutsa). In i. 130, 7, the Pūru king and Divodāsa Atithigva are both mentioned, apparently as victorious over aboriginal foes. See may denote a regular office,<sup>2</sup> similar to that of the Grāmaṇī: the Pur would then be a permanently occupied settlement. The expression may, however, merely mean the chief over a fort when it was actually occupied against hostile attack. The rarity of the word seems to favour the latter sense.

Pūrvavah is a term applied to the horse (Aśva) in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> and elsewhere.<sup>2</sup> It may either refer to a horse fastened in front as a 'leader,' or merely mean 'drawing (a chariot) for the first time,' as understood by the commentator on the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa.

1. Prśni-gu is the name of a man who is mentioned with Purukutsa and Śucantī as a protégé of the Asvins in one hymn of the Rigveda (i. 112, 7). Possibly the word is only an epithet of Purukutsa.

Cf. Geldner, Rigveda, Glossar, 114.

Prṣata is the name of an animal mentioned in the list of victims at the Aśvamedha ('horse sacrifice') in the Yajurveda Saṃhitās.<sup>1</sup> The dappled antelope or gazelle seems to be meant.<sup>2</sup>

Cf. Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 83.

Prṣatī in some passages<sup>1</sup> clearly means a 'speckled' cow. The term is, however, generally<sup>2</sup> applied to the team of the Maruts, when its sense is doubtful. The commentators usually explain it as 'speckled antelope.' But Mahīdhara,<sup>3</sup> followed by Roth,<sup>4</sup> prefers to see in it a 'dappled mare': it is true that the Maruts are often called<sup>5</sup> prṣad-aśva, which is more naturally interpreted as 'having dappled steeds,' than as 'having Prṣatis as steeds.'<sup>6</sup> In the later literature, which Grassmann<sup>7</sup> prefers to follow, the word means the female of the dappled gazelle.

<sup>1</sup> Rv. viii. 64, 10. 11, where 'deer' is nonsense, and 'mares' is improbable. The regular donation is 'cows'; Kāthaka Saṃhitā, xii. 2 ; Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, v. 5, 2, 9 (see Eggeling, Sacred Books of the East, 41, 125) ; Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā, xxiv. 2 (though this is not certain) ; Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra, xv. 14, 23, etc.

by Sāyaṇa on Rv. i. 37, 2, etc., which Benfey, Orient und Occident, 2, 250, accepted.

<sup>6</sup> So Sāyaṇa on Rv. i. 87, 4. This view is far-fetched, but is supported, in so far as the interpretation of Prṣatī and Aśva is concerned, by such passages as v. 55, 6, where the Maruts are said to yoke the Prṣatis as aśvān to their chariots ; but the sense may be 'horses (and) dappled (mares).' See, however, Pischel, Vedische Studien, 1, 226.

Prṣadhra occurs in a Vālakhilya hymn of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> as the name of a man. He is also mentioned in the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra<sup>2</sup> as a patron of Praskaṇva, and called Prṣadhra Medhya Mātariśvan (or Mātariśva); but for once there is a discrepancy between the statement of the Sūtra and the text of the Rigveda, for the hymns<sup>3</sup> there attributed to Praskaṇva as in praise of Prṣadhra have nothing in them connected with Prṣadhra, while the Anukramaṇī (Index) ascribes to Prṣadhra himself the authorship of one of them.<sup>4</sup> On the other hand, Medhya and Mātariśvan appear as separate persons in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> along with Prṣadhra.

Petva is found twice in the Atharvaveda.<sup>1</sup> In the first passage reference is made to its vāja, which Zimmer<sup>2</sup> argues can only mean 'strength,' 'swiftness,' though naturally the sense of 'male power' would seem more appropriate in a spell intended to remove lack of virility. In the second passage the Petva is mentioned as overcoming the horse (see Ubhayādant), a miracle which has a parallel in the Rigveda,<sup>3</sup> where the Petva overcomes the female<sup>4</sup> lion. The animal also occurs in the list of victims at the Aśvamedha ('horse sacrifice') in the Yajurveda Samhitās,<sup>5</sup> and occasionally elsewhere.<sup>6</sup> It appears to be the 'ram' or the 'wether,' the latter<sup>7</sup> being the sense given to it by the commentator on the Taittirīya Samhitā. But there is no conclusive evidence in favour of this meaning, while on the whole the passage of the Atharvaveda, in which vāja is found, accords best with the sense of 'ram.' Hopkins,<sup>8</sup> however, renders the word as 'goat,' though for what reason is not clear. Whether it is connected in any way with Pitva or Pidva is quite uncertain.

<sup>5</sup> Taittirīya Samhitā, v. 5, 22, 1. Though not in the parallel passage of the Vājasaneyi Samhitā, it appears to be found in the Kāthaka, according <sup>8</sup> Loc. cit.; India, Old and New, 58. He thinks the horn of the goat pierced the lion. Curiously enough, Whitney, Translation of the Atharvaveda, 253, renders the word as 'goat' in Av. v. 19, 2, but (p. 151) as 'ram' in iv. 4, 8; and Bloomfield, Hymns of the Atharvaveda, 434, speaks both of a 'ram' and a 'goat' in connexion with v. 19, 2.

Pedu is the name in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> of a protégé of the Ásvins, who gave him, in order, as it seems, to replace a bad steed, a mythical horse, hence called Paidva,<sup>2</sup> which probably represents the horse of the sun.<sup>3</sup> uncertain. The word is rendered by the St. Petersburg Dictionary and by Weber<sup>2</sup> as 'one who cuts in pieces,' a 'carver,' but Sāyaṇa<sup>3</sup> thinks that it means one who causes an enmity which has been lulled to rest to break out again.

Paiṅgya, 'descendant of Piṅga,' is the name of a teacher who is repeatedly mentioned as an authority in the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa,<sup>1</sup> where<sup>2</sup> also his doctrine is called the Paiṅgya. This teacher is further referred to in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>3</sup> which also speaks of Madhuka Paiṅgya.<sup>4</sup> It is, of course, impossible to say whether there was only one Paiṅgya or several Paiṅgyas. The followers of Paiṅgya are called Paiṅgins in the Nidāna<sup>5</sup> and Anupada<sup>6</sup> Sūtras. His text-book is called Paiṅga in the Anupada Sūtra,<sup>7</sup> while the Āpastamba Śrauta Sūtra<sup>8</sup> mentions a Paiṅgāyani Brāhmaṇa. It is clear that Paiṅgya was a teacher of a Rigveda school allied to the Kauṣītakis. Paiṅgi is a patronymic of Yāska in the Anukramaṇī of the Ātreyaī Śākhā.<sup>9</sup>

Paijavana, 'descendant of Pijavana,' is the patronymic of Sudās.<sup>1</sup> It seems most probable that Pijavana intervened in the line of succession between Divodāsa and Sudās, because the two kings have, according to tradition, quite different Purohitas, the former being served by the Bharadvājas as his priests, the latter by Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra;<sup>2</sup> this is more natural if they were divided by a period of time than if they had been, as is usually supposed, father and son. Geldner,<sup>3</sup> however, identifies Divodāsa and Pijavana.

Potr is the name of one of the priests (Rtvij) of the sacrificial ritual. Already known to the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> he is frequently mentioned later in the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>2</sup> But as Oldenberg<sup>3</sup> observes, the Potr is not in the later literature a priest of any importance, but is practically a mere name. Judging by the derivation of the name from the root pū, 'purify,' it would seem that he was properly engaged in the purification of the Soma ṣavamāna, 'Soma purifying itself,' and was perhaps employed to sing hymns to this Soma. Potra<sup>4</sup> denotes both the office and the Soma vessel of the Potr.<sup>5</sup>

Pauñji-ṣṭha is the form in the Atharvaveda,<sup>1</sup> the Vājasaneyi Samhitā,<sup>2</sup> and the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>3</sup> of the word Puñjiṣṭha, denoting 'fisherman.' It is probably a caste name, 'son of a Puñjiṣṭha,' as the designation of a functional caste.

Pauta-krata, 'descendant of Pūtakratā,' is the metronymic of a man, apparently Dasyave Vṛka, in the Rigveda.<sup>1</sup> Scheffelowitz<sup>2</sup> proposes to read Pūtakratu with the Kashmir MS. of the Rigveda, arguing that in the same hymn Pūtakratāyī, the wife of Pūtakratu, is referred to, and that therefore Pūtakratu is appropriate, Pūtakratāyī<sup>3</sup> being the feminine, like Manāyī,<sup>4</sup> for Manāvī. But the ordinary reading in the sense of descendant is perfectly legitimate, as Oldenberg<sup>5</sup> has pointed out.

<sup>2</sup> Taittirīya Saṃhitā, i. 6, 9, 1; ii. 2, 1; iii. 4, 9, 6; Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, vii. 11; Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 2, 2, 4, etc.

<sup>3</sup> i. 5, 7. Three sorts of full moon are distinguished by Gobhila—that which occurs when the full moon rises at the meeting of day and night

(sandhyā), when it rises shortly after sunset, or when it stands high in the sky. The two former alternatives are apparently those described in the passage (Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, vii. 11 = Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa, iii. 1) as pūrvā and uttarā. See Weber, Jyotiṣa, 51; Oldenberg, Sacred Books of the East, 30, 26, n.

Pauluṣi, 'descendant of Puluṣa,' is the patronymic of Satyayaḥjña in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (x. 6, 1, 1) and the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (v. 11, 1). In the Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa (i. 39, 1) the form is Pauluṣita, which is perhaps merely an error.

Paulkasa is the name of one of the victims at the Puruṣamedha ('human sacrifice') in the Yajurveda.<sup>1</sup> The name also occurs in the Brhadāranyaka Upaniṣad<sup>2</sup> as that of a despised race of men, together with the Cāṇḍāla. The Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā<sup>3</sup> has the variant Puklaka or Pulkaka, clearly the same as Pulkasa, of which Paulkasa is a derivative form, showing that a caste is meant (cf. Kaulāla, Pauṇḍiṣṭha). In the accepted theory<sup>4</sup> the Pulkasa is the son of a Niṣāda or Śūdra by a Kṣatriya woman, but this is merely speculative; the Paulkasa may either have been a functional caste, or, as Fick<sup>5</sup> believes, an aboriginal clan living by catching wild beasts, and only occasionally reduced to menial tasks.

Pyukṣṇa is found in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (v. 3, 1, 11) denoting the 'covering' for a bow (Dhanus), presumably made of skin.

Praūga is apparently equivalent to pra-yuga, denoting the fore part of the pole of the cart, the part in front of the yoke. It is mentioned in the Yajurveda Samhitās<sup>1</sup> and the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>2</sup> where it is said to be the part of the pole behind the Kastambhī, or prop on which the pole rests.

Pra-kariṭṭ is the name of one of the victims at the Puruṣamedha ('human sacrifice') in the Yajurveda.<sup>1</sup> The exact sense is uncertain; the commentator Sāyaṇa on the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa explains it to mean the 'divider of dear ones by producing enmity,' but the sense of 'sprinkler'—that is, 'seasoner'—is more likely.

<sup>1</sup> Vājasaneyi Samhitā, xxx. 12; Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 4, 8, 1. Cf. Eggeling, Sacred Books of the East, 44, Pra-kaśa in the Atharvaveda (ix. 1, 21) seems to mean either the 'thong' or the 'lash' of a whip.

Pra-krama, 'stride,' is mentioned as a measure of distance in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (x. 2, 3, 1 et seq.), but its exact length is unknown.

Prakṣa is the form in the Taittirīya Samhitā<sup>1</sup> of the usual name, Plakṣa, of a tree, being merely a phonetic alteration for the sake of the etymology. According to Aufrecht,<sup>2</sup> the same word is found in two passages of the Sāmaveda,<sup>3</sup> the same reading occurring in the Aitareya Āraṇyaka.<sup>4</sup> Oldenberg,<sup>5</sup> however, questions the correctness of the reading Prakṣa, both in the latter passage and in the Sāmaveda.

Pragātha is the name given in the Aitareya Āraṇyaka (ii. 2, 2) to the poets of the eighth Maṇḍala of the Rīgveda, so called because they composed Pragātha strophes (that is, verses consisting of a Bṛhatī or Kakubh followed by a Satobṛhatī).

Pra-calākā in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (vii. 5, 11, 1) and the Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā (Aśvamedha, v. 2) seems to mean a 'cloud-burst.'

Prajāvant Prājāpatya, 'descendant of Prajāpati,' is, according to the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (i. 21), the author of a hymn of the Rīgveda (x. 183).

Pra-ṇapāt in the Rīgveda (viii. 17, 13) denotes 'great-grandson.'

Pra-ṇejana is the word used in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (i. 2, 2, 18) to denote the 'water used for washing.'

Pra-tatāmaha, 'great-grandfather,' is found in the Atharvaveda (xviii. 4, 75).

Pra-tardana is the name in the Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā<sup>1</sup> of a king who had a Bharadvāja for his Purohita. In the Kauṣṭiki Brāhmaṇa<sup>2</sup> he appears as arriving at the sacrifice of the Ṛṣis in the Naimiṣa forest, and asking them how errors in the sacrifice could be remedied; and as finding Alīkayu Vācaspatha, the Brahman priest at the sacrifice, unable to say what was to be done. In the Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad<sup>3</sup> it is said that Pratardana Daivodāsi went to Indra's world through his death in battle. The patronymic connects him with Divodāsa, the ancestor or father of Sudās, and the mention of Bharadvāja (probably 'a Bharadvāja' is meant) as his priest supports the patronymic, for Divodāsa is a special favourite of the singers of the Bharadvāja family. The name, moreover, is reminiscent of the Trtsus (the root tard appears in both) and of the Pratṛdaḥ (see Pratṛd). But he is not in Vedic literature a king of Kāśi.<sup>4</sup> Geldner<sup>5</sup> regards him as Divodāsa's son, but this is not likely. Cf. Prātardani.

Prati-dīvan denotes in the Rigveda (x. 38, 6) and the Atharvaveda (vii. 109, 4) 'opponent in the game of dice.'

Prati-pana is found in the Atharvaveda (iii. 15, 4) denoting 'barter' or 'exchange.' Cf. Pana.

Prati-prasna occurs in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> applied to Prajāpati as the decider of doubts; it may have been a technical term for an 'arbitrator' (cf. Madhyamaśi and Dharma).

<sup>1</sup> i. 4, 5, 11; iv. 1, 3, 14; Eggeling, Sacred Books of the East, 12, 131, and 26, 267, renders pratiprasnam by '(went to Prajāpati) for his decision,' which leaves it ambiguous how he took the passages.

Prati-pra-sthātr is the name of a priest (Ṛtvij), one of the assistants of the Adhvaryu, in the later Saṃhitās and the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>1</sup> He is not mentioned in the Rigveda,<sup>2</sup> but mention is once made in that Saṃhitā<sup>3</sup> of the two Adhvaryus. These may have meant, as later, the Adhvaryu and the Prati-prasthātr. Oldenberg,<sup>4</sup> however, thinks that the Adhvaryu and the Agnīdh are intended, a conjecture for which there is some authority.<sup>5</sup>

Prati-veśya is mentioned in the Vaṃśa (list of teachers) at the end of the Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka (xv. 1) as the pupil of Brhad-diva. Cf. Prati-veśya.

Prati-śrutkā, 'echo,' shows that this phenomenon had already received a name as early as the Yajurveda Saṃhitās<sup>1</sup> and the Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad (iv. 13).

Prati-ṣṭhā is found in one passage of the Atharvaveda,<sup>1</sup> where Zimmer<sup>2</sup> thinks the word is used as a technical term of law; possibly a 'sanctuary' may be meant, but it is more than doubtful whether the sense of 'home' or 'abode,' as given by Roth,<sup>3</sup> is not quite adequate. Prati-sara is used in several passages of the Atharvaveda<sup>1</sup> and later<sup>2</sup> to denote an amulet, according to Roth,<sup>3</sup> because it was a band, and so returned on itself (prati-sr, 'go back'). In a second passage<sup>2</sup> he is called Pratīdarśa Aibhāvata, and again brought into connexion with Suplan Sārñjaya. According to Eggeling,<sup>3</sup> he is to be deemed a king of the Śviknas; apparently, too, he was a descendant of Ibhāvant. Pratīpa Prātisatvana,<sup>1</sup> or Prātisutvana,<sup>2</sup> is the name of a man mentioned in a hymn of the Atharvaveda.<sup>3</sup> Zimmer,<sup>3</sup> with great ingenuity, compares the fact that Parikṣit is mentioned as a Kuru king in the Atharvaveda,<sup>4</sup> and that, according to the Epic genealogies, his grandson was Pratiśravas, with which name Prātisutvana, as very possibly a Prākṛitized version of Pratiśrutvana may be compared, and his great-grandson was Pratīpa. The identification cannot, however, be regarded as at all certain, and while the Epic may have derived its genealogy from the Atharvaveda, it may have preserved an independent tradition. Böhtlingk<sup>5</sup> renders prātisatvanam as 'in the direction opposed to the Satvans', and this may be right.

Pratr̥d occurs once in the plural in a hymn of the Ṛgveda,<sup>1</sup> where it is clearly a variant of the word Tr̥tsu. Moreover, the name of King Pratardana, a descendant of the Tr̥tsu king, Divodāsa, confirms the identification of Tr̥tsu and Pratr̥d.<sup>2</sup>

Pra-diś, like Diś, normally designates only a 'quarter' of the sky, or 'point' of the compass. Four,<sup>1</sup> five,<sup>2</sup> six,<sup>3</sup> and seven<sup>4</sup> such points are enumerated, or more generally 'all' are mentioned.<sup>5</sup> In some passages,<sup>6</sup> on the other hand, the word has the definite sense of an 'intermediate quarter,' which is more precisely denoted by avāntara-diś.

Pra-dhi is the name of some part of the wheel of a chariot, probably the 'felly.' In one passage of the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> and in one of the Atharvaveda,<sup>2</sup> the 'nave' (Nabhya) and the 'felly' (pradhī) are mentioned along with the Upadhi, which must then be either a collective name for the spokes or an inner rim within the felly and binding the spokes. In the riddle hymn of the Rigveda<sup>3</sup> twelve Pradhis are mentioned with three naves, one wheel, and three hundred and sixty spokes; what exactly is here meant by this particular term it would be useless to conjecture, though it is clear that the passage as a whole symbolizes the year with three seasons, twelve months, and three hundred and sixty days. Elsewhere<sup>4</sup> the nave and the Pradhi alone are mentioned, or the Pradhi occurs by itself.<sup>5</sup>

Pra-patha in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>2</sup> denotes a 'long journey.' Wilson<sup>3</sup> has seen in one passage<sup>4</sup> the sense of 'resting-place,' where travellers can obtain food (khādī). Zimmer<sup>5</sup> shows that this is impossible, and the reading (prapathesu) in the passage in question is not improbably<sup>6</sup> an error for prapadesu. Pra-pathin<sup>1</sup> is the name of a patron, perhaps a Yādava, in one hymn of the Rigveda.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> viii. 1, 30. Cf. Ludwig, Translation of the Rigveda, 3, 159; Hopkins, Journal of the American Oriental Society, 17, 90.

<sup>5</sup> Roth, St. Petersburg Dictionary, s.v., took it to mean 'daybreak'; so also Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 362.

Böhtlingk, Dictionary, s.v., on the other hand, gives the meaning as 'decline of day,' 'evening.' See also Bloomfield, Journal of the American Oriental Society, 16, 24 et seq.; Oldenberg, Sacred Books of the East, 46, 183 et seq.

Pra-protha is the name in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa (viii. 4, 1) of a plant used as a substitute for Soma.

Pra-pharvī denotes a 'wanton woman' in the Rigveda (x. 85, 22), the Atharvaveda (v. 22, 7), and the Yajurveda Saṃhitās.<sup>1</sup>

Pra-budh, occurring in one passage of the Rigveda (viii. 27, 19), is used in the locative parallel with nimrucci, 'at the setting (of the sun),' and clearly means 'at the rising (of the sun).'

Pra-maganda is the name of a prince in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> where he is mentioned as the king of the Kikaṭas, and where he seems to be designated by the epithet naicāsākha, 'belonging to a low branch or race.' On the other hand, Yāska<sup>2</sup> takes Pramaganda to mean the 'son of a usurer,' an explanation that is hardly probable. Hillebrandt<sup>3</sup> thinks that naicāsākha refers not to Pramaganda, but to the Soma plant, the plant being called nīcāsākha, 'having shoots turned downwards,' and that the passage refers to a raid against the Kikaṭas, who were not observers of the milk cult or the Soma cult, with the intention of winning their lands where the Soma grew and where there were cows. Böhtlingk,<sup>4</sup> however, questions this view, which is not very probable. A place name is possibly meant by Naicāsākha.<sup>5</sup> The name Pramaganda seems un-Āryan.

Pra-lāpa, 'prattle,' is found with other words of similar import in the Atharvaveda,<sup>1</sup> and in the Brāhmaṇas<sup>2</sup> of the Rigveda. The phrase Aitaśa-pralāpa, 'Discourse of Aitaśa,' occurs as a designation of certain passages of the Atharvaveda.<sup>3</sup> The name has no justification in the text itself.

Pra-śāstr is the name of one of the priests (Ṛtvij) at the Vedic sacrifice. In the lesser sacrifices he plays no part at all, but he appears in the animal (paśu) and Soma sacrifices, in the former as the only, in the latter as the main, assistant of the Hotṛ priest in the singing of the litanies. He is mentioned by name in the Rīgveda,<sup>1</sup> and often later.<sup>2</sup> He is also in the Rīgveda<sup>3</sup> called Upavaktṛ, this name, like Praśāstr, being derived from the fact that one of his chief functions was to issue directions (praiśa) to the other priests. Another name for him was Maitrāvaruṇa, because his litanies were mainly addressed to Mitra and Varuṇa, a connexion already visible in the Rīgveda.<sup>4</sup> The 'two divine Hotṛs' of the Āprī litanies denote, according to Oldenberg,<sup>5</sup> the heavenly counterparts of the Hotṛ and the Praśāstr.

<sup>1</sup> i. 94, 6; ii. 5, 4; praśāstra, 'the Soma bowl of the Praśāstr,' 36, 6; praśāstra, 'the office of the Praśāstr,' ii. 1, 2=x. 91, 10.

Cf. Oldenberg, op. cit., 383, 390, 391; Weber, Indische Studien, 10, 141 et seq.

Praśna denotes generally 'enquiry' or 'disputed question,' the phrase praśnam eti having the sense 'he asks a person for the decision of a disputed point' in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā<sup>1</sup> and elsewhere.<sup>2</sup> Thus Praśna comes to have the definite meaning of 'decision' in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.<sup>3</sup> In the list of victims at the Puruṣamedha ('human sacrifice') in the Yajurveda<sup>4</sup> are included the Praśnin, the Abhi-praśnin, and the Praśna-vivāka; it is quite likely that here the three parties to a civil case are meant—the plaintiff, the defendant, and the arbitrator or judge (Madhyamaśi).

Praṣṭi, like Prṣṭyā, denotes a 'side horse,' which, however, possibly<sup>1</sup> did not necessarily mean a horse running beside the yoke-horses, but may also have meant a third horse yoked in front as a leader. This seems to be indicated by the reference in the Rīgveda<sup>2</sup> to the Praṣṭi—here applied to the Maruts' team—leading (vahati) the team (rohitaḥ). In an obscure passage of the Atharvaveda<sup>3</sup> there is a reference to the Praṣṭis in connexion with a pañca-vāhī, 'drawn by five,' but it is impossible to gain any clear idea of what is meant. The Praṣṭi is not rarely referred to elsewhere.<sup>4</sup> In one passage<sup>5</sup> the dhuryau and the praṣṭyau are mentioned together; this probably means the two horses yoked to the pole, with two others fastened in some way one on each side. The adjectives praṣṭimant,<sup>6</sup> praṣṭi-vāhana,<sup>7</sup> praṣṭi-vāhin,<sup>8</sup> are all used of Ratha, 'chariot,' meaning 'drawn by a side horse (or horses)' in addition to the yoke-horses. Cf. Ratha.

Pra-stotṛ is the name of an assistant of the Udgātṛ priest who sings the Prastāva,<sup>1</sup> or prelude of the Sāman chant. His not being mentioned by name in the Rigveda is merely an accident, for he is clearly referred to in one passage,<sup>2</sup> and in the later literature<sup>3</sup> he is a frequent figure. Prācya denotes in the plural 'dwellers in the east.' They are mentioned in the list of peoples in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.<sup>1</sup> It is very probable that the Kāśīs, Kosalas, Videhas, and perhaps Magadhas, are meant, as Oldenberg<sup>2</sup> supposes. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>3</sup> the Easterns are said to call Agni by the name of Śarva, and their mode of making tombs is there<sup>4</sup> referred to with disapproval. The Lāṭyāyana Śrauta Sūtra<sup>5</sup> explains the Vipatha, 'rough car,' of the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>6</sup> as a car of the Easterns (prācya-ratha). In the Saṃhitopaniṣad Brāhmaṇa<sup>7</sup> reference is made to the Prācya-Pāñcālas.

Prājāpatya, 'descendant of Prajāpati,' is only a patronymic of mythical persons like Āruṇi Suparṇeya ('descendant of Suparṇā') in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka (x. 79), or of Prajāvanta in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (i. 21).

Prāṇa, properly denoting 'breath,' is a term of wide and vague significance in Vedic literature. It is frequently mentioned from the Rīgveda<sup>1</sup> onwards; in the Āraṇyakas and Upaniṣads it is one of the commonest symbols of the unity of the universe.<sup>2</sup> In the narrow sense Prāṇa denotes one of the vital airs, of which five are usually<sup>3</sup> enumerated—Prāṇa, Apāna, Vyāna, Udāna, and Samāna; but often only two, Prāṇa and Apāna,<sup>4</sup> or Prāṇa and Vyāna,<sup>5</sup> or Prāṇa and Udāna;<sup>6</sup> or three, Prāṇa, Apāna, and Vyāna,<sup>7</sup> or Prāṇa, Udāna, and Vyāna,<sup>8</sup> or Prāṇa, Udāna, and Samāna;<sup>9</sup> or four, Prāṇa, Apāna, Vyāna, and Samāna,<sup>10</sup> or Prāṇa, Apāna, Udāna, Vyāna.<sup>11</sup> The exact sense of each of these breaths when all are mentioned cannot be determined.<sup>12</sup>

Prāṇa is also used in a wider sense to denote the organs of sense,<sup>13</sup> or as Sāyaṇa<sup>14</sup> puts it, the 'orifices of the head,' etc. These are given as six in one passage of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>15</sup> presumably the eyes, ears, and nostrils. More frequently there are stated to be seven in the head, the mouth being then included.<sup>16</sup> Sometimes again they are mentioned as nine,<sup>17</sup> or as seven in the head and two below.<sup>18</sup> Ten are counted in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>19</sup> and the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>20</sup> while even eleven are mentioned in the Kāṭhaka Upaniṣad,<sup>21</sup> and twelve in the Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā,<sup>22</sup> where the two breasts are added. Exactly what organs are taken to make up the numbers beyond seven is not certain.<sup>23</sup> The tenth is the navel (nābhi) in the Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā;<sup>24</sup> when eleven are named the Brahma-randhra<sup>25</sup> (suture in the crown) may be included; in the Atharvaveda,<sup>26</sup> as interpreted by the Bṛhad-āraṇyaka Upaniṣad,<sup>27</sup> the seventh and eighth are the organs of taste and speech respectively. But usually these make one only, and the eighth and ninth are either in the breast<sup>28</sup> or below (the organs of evacuation).<sup>29</sup>

The word Prāṇa has sometimes merely the general sense of breath, even when opposed to Apāna.<sup>30</sup> But its proper sense is beyond question 'breathing forth,' 'expiration,' and not as the St. Petersburg Dictionary explains it, 'the breath inspired,' a version due to the desire to interpret Apāna as 'expiration,' a meaning suggested by the preposition apa, 'away.' This being clearly shown both by the native scholiasts<sup>31</sup> and by other evidence,<sup>32</sup> Böhtlingk<sup>33</sup> later accepted the new view.

Proti Kausāmbeya Kausuru-bindī ('descendant of Kusuru-bindī') is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> as a pupil and contemporary of Uddālaka. In the Taittirīya Saṃhitā,<sup>2</sup> on the other hand, Kusurubindī is called Auddālaki, 'descendant of Uddālaka,' a fact which seems to indicate that little value is to be attached to these patronymics and allegations of contemporaneousness.

Plā-yogi, 'descendant of Playoga,' is the patronymic of Āsaṅga in the Rigveda.<sup>1</sup> According to the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra,<sup>2</sup> Āsaṅga was a woman, but became a man. This version, repeated by Sāyaṇa in his commentary on the Rigveda,<sup>3</sup> is a mere blunder based on the fact that an additional verse, tacked on to the hymn,<sup>4</sup> contains the expression śaśvatī nārī, which has been taken to mean 'his wife Śaśvatī,'<sup>4</sup> instead of merely 'every woman.'

PH.

Phaṇa occurs in some manuscripts of the Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad,<sup>1</sup> and is explained as meaning an ‘ornament.’ But it is merely a misreading of the correct word phala in the compound phala-hastāḥ, ‘bearing fruits in their hands.’

Baka Dālbhya ('descendant of Dalbha') is the name of a person mentioned in the Jaiminiya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa as constraining Indra for the Ājakeśins (i. 9, 2), and as a Kuru-Pāṇcāla (iv. 7, 2).

Balāsa is the name of a disease mentioned several times in the Atharvaveda<sup>1</sup> and occasionally later.<sup>2</sup> Mahidhara<sup>3</sup> and Sāyana<sup>4</sup> interpret the term as 'consumption.' Zimmer<sup>5</sup> supports this view on the ground that it is mentioned<sup>6</sup> as a kind of Yakṣma, makes the bones and joints fall apart (asthi-sraṃsa, paruh-sraṃsa),<sup>7</sup> and is caused by love, aversion, and the heart,<sup>8</sup> characteristics which agree with the statements of the later Hindu medicine.<sup>9</sup> It is in keeping with a demon of the character of consumption that Balāsa should appear as an accompaniment of Takman.<sup>10</sup> Grohmann,<sup>11</sup> however, thought

Bali occurs several times in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and often later<sup>2</sup> in the sense of tribute to a king or offering to a god. Zimmer<sup>3</sup> thinks that the offerings were in both cases voluntary. He compares the notices of the Germans in Tacitus,<sup>4</sup> where the kings of the tribes are said to receive gifts in kind as presents, but not a regular tribute. There seems to be no ground whatever for this view. No doubt in origin the prerogatives of monarchy were due to voluntary action on the part of the tribesmen,<sup>5</sup> but that the Vedic peoples, who were essentially a body of conquering invaders, were in this state is most improbable, and the attitude of the Vedic Indian to his gods was at least as compatible with tribute as with voluntary gifts. Zimmer admits that in the case of hostile tribes<sup>6</sup> tribute must be meant even in the Rigveda. See also Rājan.

<sup>1</sup> To a god, Rv. i. 70, 9; v. 1, 10; viii. 100, 9; to a king, in the compound bali-hṛt, 'paying tribute,' vii. 6, 5; x. 173, 6.

1. Balhika is the name of a people in the Atharvaveda<sup>1</sup> where the fever (Takman) is called upon to go to the Mūjavants, the Mahāvṛṣas, and the Balhikas. The Mūjavants are quite certainly a northern tribe, and though, as Bloomfield<sup>2</sup> suggests, the passage may contain a pun on Balhika as suggesting 'outsider' (from bahis, 'without'), still no doubt the name was chosen from a northern tribe. But the view of Roth<sup>3</sup> and Weber,<sup>4</sup> which Zimmer<sup>5</sup> once accepted, that an Iranian tribe is referred to (cf. Balkh), is not at all probable. Zimmer<sup>6</sup> shows that there is no need whatever to assume Iranian influence. See also Parśu.

2. Balhika Prātipīya is the name of a Kuru king in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>1</sup> where he appears as having been opposed to the restoration of Duṣtarītu Paumsāyana to his hereditary sovereignty over the Srñjayas, but as having failed to prevent the restoration being carried out by Revottaras Pāṭava Cākra Sthapati. The epithet Prātipīya is curious: if it connects him with Pratīpa (whose son he is in the Epic), the form is remarkable, Zimmer<sup>2</sup> indeed tacitly altering it to Prātipīya. In the Epic and the Purāṇas<sup>3</sup> he is in the form of Vāhlika made a brother of Devāpi and Śantanu, and a son of Pratīpa. To base chronological conclusions on this<sup>4</sup> would be utterly misleading, for the facts are that Devāpi was son of Ṛṣiṣeṇa and a priest, while Śantanu was a Kuru prince of unknown parentage, but not probably a son of Pratīpa, who seems to be a late figure in the Vedic age, later than Parikṣit, being his great-grandson in the Epic. Very possibly Balhika was a descendant of Pratīpa. Why he bore the name Balhika must remain uncertain, for there is no evidence of any sort regarding it.

Balbūtha is mentioned in one hymn of the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> along with Tarukṣa and Prthuśravas, as a giver of gifts to the singer. He is called a Dāsa, but Roth<sup>2</sup> was inclined to amend the text so as to say that the singer received a hundred Dāsas from Balbūtha. Zimmer's<sup>3</sup> suggestion that he may have been the son of an aboriginal mother, or perhaps an aboriginal himself, seems probable.<sup>4</sup> If this was the case, it would be a clear piece of evidence for the establishment of friendly relations between the Āryans and the Dāsas.

Bākura in one passage of the Rigveda (ix. 1, 8) is used as an epithet of Dṛti, the combined words denoting a wind instrument of some kind. Cf. Bakura.

Bāḍeyī-putra ('son of Bāḍeyī') is mentioned in the last Vaṃśa (list of teachers) of the Mādhyamīna recension of the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (vi. 4, 30) as a pupil of Mauṣikī-putra.

Bāṇa denotes 'arrow' in the Rigveda (vi. 75, 17) and later (Av. iii. 23, 2; vi. 105, 2, etc.).

Bāṇavant in the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (iii. 8, 2) denotes an 'arrow' like Bāṇa. Its more normal sense is 'quiver' (lit., 'containing arrows'), which is its sense in the Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā (xvi. 10) and the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (v. 3, 1, 11).

Bādarāyaṇa ('descendant of Badara') is the name of a teacher in the Vaṃśa (list of teachers) at the end of the Sāmavidhāna Brāhmaṇa.<sup>1</sup>

Bādhyoga ('descendant of Badhyoga') is the patronymic of Jihvāvant, a pupil of Asita Vārṣagaṇa, in the last Vaṃśa (list of teachers) in the Mādhyamīna recension of the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (vi. 4, 33).

Bādhva is the name of a teacher in the Aitareya Āraṇyaka (iii. 2, 3). The reading in the Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka (viii. 3) is Vātsya.<sup>1</sup>

Bārhat-sāmā is an anomalously formed word meaning 'daughter of Bṛhatsāman' in the Atharvaveda,<sup>1</sup> where her name occurs in a hymn for easy conception.

Bāhika is applied in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> to the people of the west, of the Panjab,<sup>2</sup> as opposed to the Prācyas or easterns. They are said to have called Agni by the name of Bhava.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Mahābhārata, viii. 2030 et seq., where the Bāhikas are defined as the people of the Panjab and the Indus. This coincides exactly with what seems to be meant by the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, which regards as the middle the land to the east of the Sarasvatī.

Cf. Weber, Indische Studien, 1, 189; 2, 37; Eggeling, Sacred Books of the East, 12, 201, n. 2.

Bāhu, 'arm,' as a measure of length, is found in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (vi. 2, 11, 1) and often in the Sūtras.

Bāhu-vṛkta is the name of a man, apparently a Ṛṣi, who overcame foes in battle, according to the Rigveda.<sup>1</sup>

Bimba appears in one passage of the Jaiminiya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa (iii. 5, 6) to denote the plant Momordica monodelpha.

Bilva is the name of the wood-apple tree (Aigle marmelos). It is mentioned in the Brāhmaṇas<sup>1</sup> and in the Atharvaveda,<sup>2</sup> where a reference to its valuable fruit may be intended. According to the Taittirīya Saṃhitā,<sup>3</sup> the sacrificial post was made of Bilva wood in some cases. The Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka<sup>4</sup> contains a hymn in praise of the virtues of an amulet of Bilva (irā-maṇi bailva).<sup>5</sup>

Bisa denotes the radical fibres of the lotus, which seem to have been eaten as a delicacy as early as the times of the Atharvaveda.<sup>1</sup> It is mentioned also in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>2</sup> and the Aitareya Āraṇyaka.<sup>3</sup>

Bija denotes 'seed,' the operation of sowing seed (vap) being several times referred to in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later.<sup>2</sup> In a metaphorical sense the term is used in the Upaniṣads of the classes of beings according to origin, of which the Chāndogya Upaniṣad<sup>3</sup> enumerates three, the Aitareya<sup>4</sup> four. The former list includes aṇḍa-ja, 'egg-born,' jīva-ja, 'born alive,' and udbhij-ja, 'produced from sprouts,' 'germinating,' while the latter adds sveda-ja, 'sweat-born'—that is, 'generated by hot moisture,' an expression which is glossed to comprise flies, worms, etc. Cf. Kṛṣi.

<sup>1</sup> x. 94, 13; 101, 3. Cf. metaphorically, x. 85, 37. In v. 53, 13, dhānya bija means the 'seed which produces corn.'

Budila Āśvatarāśvi or Āśvatara Āśvi is mentioned several times in the Brāhmaṇa literature as a teacher. According to the Chāndogya<sup>1</sup> and the Bṛhadāraṇyaka<sup>2</sup> Upaniṣads, he was a contemporary of Janaka of Videha, and, according to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>3</sup> of Aśvapati, the Kekaya king. He is also mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.<sup>4</sup>

Prastoka Sārñjaya, a fact alluded to in the Mānava Dharma Śāstra,<sup>3</sup> where takṣan is treated as a descriptive attribute, 'a carpenter.' Apparently Bṛbu was a Paṇi, though the words of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> might be taken to mean that he was one who had overthrown them entirely. If so, Paṇi must here certainly mean a merchant in a good sense, Bṛbu being then a merchant prince.<sup>4</sup> According to Weber,<sup>5</sup> the name suggests connexion with Babylon, but this conjecture must be regarded as quite improbable. Hillebrandt<sup>6</sup> sensibly expresses no opinion as to Bṛbu, while Brunnhofer's<sup>7</sup> attempt to recognize a people named Táσκοι, and to connect them with the Vedic word takṣan, is valueless, especially considering the fact that Takṣan is not found as an epithet of Bṛbu in the Rigveda.

Bṛsaya is mentioned twice in the Rigveda, being in the first passage<sup>1</sup> connected with the Paṇis, and in the second<sup>2</sup> with the Pārāvatas and the Paṇis. According to the St. Petersburg Dictionary, the word is the name of a demon,<sup>3</sup> but is in the second passage<sup>2</sup> used as an appellative, perhaps meaning 'sorcerer.'<sup>4</sup> Hillebrandt<sup>5</sup> thinks that a people is meant locating them in Arachosia or Drangiana with the Pārāvatas and the Paṇis, and comparing Βαρσαέντης, satrap of Arachosia and Drangiana in the time of Darius.<sup>6</sup> But this theory is not probable.

Bṛhad-uktha is mentioned in an obscure hymn of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> as a priest; in two hymns of the tenth Maṇḍala<sup>2</sup> he is definitely a Ṛṣi. He is also mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>3</sup> as having consecrated Durmukha Pāñcāla, and is called Vāmadeva's son in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>4</sup> In the Pāñcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>5</sup> he appears as Vāmneya, 'descendant of Vāmnī.' Bekanāṭa occurs only once in the Rīgveda,<sup>1</sup> when Indra is said to overcome all the Bekanāṭas and the Paṇis. The natural sense, therefore, seems to be 'usurer,' the explanation given by Yāska.<sup>2</sup> The word has a foreign appearance, but its provenance can hardly be determined: it might just as well be aboriginal as Babylonian.<sup>3</sup> Hillebrandt<sup>4</sup> thinks Brunnhofer is right in identifying Bekanāṭa with Bikanir.

Brahma-carya denotes the condition of life of the Brahma-cārin<sup>1</sup> or religious student. The technical sense is first found in the last Maṇḍala of the Rīgveda.<sup>2</sup> The practice of studentship doubtless developed, and was more strictly regulated by custom as time went on, but it is regularly assumed and discussed in the later Vedic literature, being obviously a necessary part of Vedic society.

The Atharvaveda<sup>3</sup> has in honour of the Brahmacārin a hymn which already gives all the characteristic features of religious studentship. The youth is initiated (upa-nī) by the teacher<sup>4</sup> into a new life; he wears an antelope skin, and lets his hair grow long;<sup>5</sup> he collects fuel,<sup>6</sup> and begs,<sup>7</sup> learns, and practises penance. All these characteristics appear in the later literature. The student lives in the house of his teacher (ācārya-kula-vāsin;<sup>8</sup> ante-vāsin)<sup>9</sup>; he begs,<sup>10</sup> looks after the sacrificial fires,<sup>11</sup> and tends the house.<sup>12</sup> His term of studentship might be long extended: it was normally fixed at twelve years,<sup>13</sup> but much longer periods, such as thirty-two years, are mentioned.<sup>14</sup> The age at which studentship began varied:<sup>15</sup> Śvetaketu commenced at twelve and studied for twelve years.<sup>16</sup>

A Mantra in the Āśvalāyana Gṛhya Sūtra, i. 22, 1, 2, and elsewhere, sums up the duties of the Brahmacārin as 'thou art a Brahmacārin: eat water; perform thy duty; sleep not in the daytime; obedient to thy teacher study the Veda (brahmacārya asy; apo 'śāna; karma kuru; divā mā svāpśīr; ācāry-āyādhiṇo vedam adhīṣva).' One duty specially referred to in the Aitareya Āraṇyaka, iii. 1, 6; Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka, vii. 19, and the Chāndogya Upaniṣad, iv. 5, 5, was the guarding of the teacher's cattle when they were grazing on their pasture grounds. From these grounds, too, the pupil would, no doubt, bring dried dung for fuel, as well as any available sticks. As regards obedience to the teacher, cf. Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. 3, 3, 6.

It is assumed in the Gṛhya Sūtras that the three Āryan castes were all required to pass through a period of studentship. But that this is much more than priestly schematism is uncertain. No doubt individuals of the Kṣatriya or Vaiśya caste might go through part of the period of studentship, just as Burmese boys of all classes now pass some time in a monastery as students. This is borne out by the reference in the Atharvaveda<sup>17</sup> to the king guarding his country by Brahmacarya—though that is susceptible of a different interpretation—and more clearly by the reference in the Kāṭhaka Samhitā<sup>18</sup> to a rite intended to benefit one who, although not a Brahmin, had studied (vidyām anūcyā), but had not gained renown, and by references in the Upaniṣads to kings who like Janaka studied the Vedas and the Upaniṣads.<sup>19</sup> Normally, however, the Kṣatriya studied the art of war.<sup>20</sup>

One of the duties of the Brahmacārin was chastity. But reference is in several places<sup>21</sup> made to the possibility of misconduct between a student and the wife of his preceptor, nor is any very severe penance imposed in early times—later it is different—for such a sin. In certain cases the ritual required a breach of chastity, no doubt as a magic spell to secure fertility.<sup>22</sup>

Even an old man might on occasion become a pupil, as the story of Āruṇi shows.<sup>23</sup>

<sup>15</sup> See Weber, Indische Studien, 10, 21. The Sūtras allowed for a Brāhmaṇa the ages 8-16; for a Kṣatriya, 11-22; for a Vaiśya, 12-24. The difference between the Brāhmaṇa and the Kṣatriya, compared with that between the Kṣatriya and the Vaiśya, shows that the two latter castes were in a different position from the Brāhmaṇa.

Brahma-datta Caikitāneya ('descendant of Cekitāna') is the name of a teacher in the Bṛhadāranyaka Upaniṣad (i. 3, 26). He is mentioned also in the Jaiminīya Upaniṣad (i. 38, 1; 59, 1) as patronized by Abhipratārin, the Kuru king.

2. Brahman is found in many passages of the Rigveda and later in the sense of 'priest.' In many passages of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> he is referred to as praising the gods; in others<sup>2</sup> the sense of 'priest' is adequate. In not a few cases<sup>3</sup> the priesthood as a profession is clearly alluded to, nor is there any reason to doubt<sup>4</sup> that in all cases the word has the technical sense of a member of the priesthood. There is, however, considerable doubt as to the number of cases in the Rigveda, where it has the technical sense of the priest who guides the sacrifice generally. It is undoubtedly found in that sense, both Muir<sup>5</sup> and Roth<sup>6</sup> recognizing instances of its being used thus. Geldner,<sup>7</sup> however, is anxious to find that sense in a large number of passages, and insists that the Purohita was normally a Brahman in the narrower sense. Oldenberg,<sup>8</sup> on the other hand, holds with greater probability that in most of the passages adduced Brahman means simply 'priest,' and that the Purohita, who was essentially not a member of the ordinary body of sacrificing priests (Rtvij), was, when he officiated at the sacrifice, more usually the Hotṛ priest, and only later became the Brahman. This change he regards as having taken place when the importance of the hymns declined, and most weight was laid on the functions of the priest who superintended the sacrifice as a whole, and by his magic repaired the flaws in the sacrifice.<sup>9</sup> In the later literature both senses of the word are quite common.<sup>10</sup>

Brahma-purohita is found in the Kāthaka Saṃhitā<sup>1</sup> and the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>2</sup> where the St. Petersburg Dictionary gives the sense as 'having the priesthood as its Purohita.' parts. In the Atharvaveda<sup>2</sup> and later<sup>3</sup> it is a very common word denoting 'priest,' and it appears in the quadruple division of the castes in the Puruṣa-sūkta ('hymn of man') of the Rīgveda.<sup>4</sup>

It seems certain that in the Rīgveda this Brāhmaṇa, or Brahmin, is already a separate caste, differing from the warrior and agricultural castes.<sup>5</sup> The texts regularly claim for them a superiority to the Kṣatriya caste,<sup>6</sup> and the Brahmin is able by his spells or manipulation of the rite to embroil the people and the warriors<sup>7</sup> or the different sections of the warriors.<sup>8</sup> If it is necessary to recognize, as is sometimes done, that the Brahmin does pay homage to the king at the Rājasūya,<sup>9</sup> nevertheless the unusual fact is carefully explained away so as to leave the priority of the Brahmin unaffected. But it is expressly recognized that the union of the Kṣatriya and the Brāhmaṇa is essential for complete prosperity.<sup>10</sup> It is admitted<sup>11</sup> that the king or the nobles might at times oppress the Brahmins, but it is indicated that ruin is then certain swiftly to follow.

The Brahmins are gods on earth,<sup>12</sup> like the gods in heaven, but this claim is hardly found in the Rigveda.<sup>13</sup>

In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>14</sup> the Brahmin is said to be the 'recipient of gifts' (ādāyī) and the 'drinker of the offering' (āpāyī). The other two epithets applied, āvasāyī and yathā-kāma-prayāpya, are more obscure; the former denotes either 'dwelling everywhere'<sup>15</sup> or 'seeking food';<sup>16</sup> the latter is usually taken as 'moving at pleasure,' but it must rather allude to the power of the king to assign a place of residence to the Brahmin.

In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>17</sup> the prerogatives of the Brahmin are summed up as (1) Arcā, 'honour'; (2) Dāna, 'gifts'; (3) Ajyeyatā, 'freedom from oppression'; and (4) Avadhyatā, 'freedom from being killed.' On the other hand, his duties are summed up as (5) Brāhmaṇya, 'purity of descent'; (6) Pratirūpa-caryā, 'devotion of the duties of his caste'; and (7) Loka-pakti, 'the perfecting of people' (by teaching).

1. Respect paid to Brahmins.—The texts are full<sup>18</sup> of references to the civilities to be paid to the Brahmin. He is styled bhagavant,<sup>19</sup> and is provided with good food<sup>20</sup> and entertainment wherever he goes. Indeed, his sanctity exempts him from any close inquiry into his real claim to Brahminhood according to the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa.<sup>21</sup>

2. Gifts to Brahmins.—The Dānastuti ('Praise of gifts') is a recognized feature of the Rigveda, and the greed of the poets for Dakṣiṇās, or sacrificial fees, is notorious. Vedic texts<sup>22</sup> themselves recognize that the literature thence resulting (Nārā- śamsī) was often false to please the donors. It was, however, a rule<sup>23</sup> that Brahmins should not accept what had been refused by others; this indicates a keen sense of the danger of cheapening their wares. So exclusively theirs was the right to receive gifts that the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>24</sup> has to explain how Taranta and Purumīlha became able to accept gifts by composing a Rigvedic hymn.<sup>25</sup> The exaggerations in the celebration of the gifts bestowed on the priests has the curious result of giving us a series of numerals of some interest (Daśan). In some passages<sup>26</sup> certain gifts—those of a horse or sheep—are forbidden, but this rule was not, it is clear, generally observed.

3. Immunities of Brahmins.—The Brahmin claimed to be exempt from the ordinary exercise of the royal power. When a king gives all his land and what is on it to the priests, the gift does not cover the property of the Brahmin according to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>27</sup> The king censures all, but not the Brahmin,<sup>28</sup> nor can he safely oppress any Brahmin other than an ignorant priest.<sup>29</sup> An arbitrator (or a witness) must decide (or speak) for a Brahmin against a non-Brahmin in a legal dispute.<sup>30</sup>

The Brahmin's proper food is the Soma,<sup>31</sup> not Surā<sup>32</sup> or Parisrut,<sup>33</sup> and he is forbidden to eat certain forms of flesh.<sup>34</sup> On the other hand, he alone is allowed to eat the remains of the sacrifice,<sup>35</sup> for no one else is sufficiently holy to consume food which the gods have eaten. while he exercises his art.<sup>37</sup> His wife<sup>38</sup> and his cow<sup>39</sup> are both sacred.

4. Legal Position of Brahmins.—The Taittirīya Saṃhitā<sup>40</sup> lays down a penalty of a hundred (the unit meant is unknown) for an insult to a Brahmin, and of a thousand for a blow; but if his blood is drawn, the penalty is a spiritual one. The only real murder is the slaying of a Brahmin according to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>41</sup> The crime of slaying a Brahmin ranks above the sin of killing any other man, but below that of killing an embryo (bhrūna) in the Yajurveda;<sup>42</sup> the crime of slaying an embryo whose sex is uncertain is on a level with that of slaying a Brahmin.<sup>43</sup> The murder of a Brahmin can be expiated only by the horse sacrifice,<sup>44</sup> or by a lesser rite in the late Taittirīya Āraṇyaka.<sup>45</sup> The ritual slaying of a Brahmin is allowed in the later ceremonial,<sup>46</sup> and hinted at in the curious legend of Śunaḥśepa;<sup>47</sup> and a Purohita might be punished with death for treachery to his master.<sup>48</sup>

5. Purity of Birth.—The importance of pure descent is seen in the stress laid on being a descendant of a Ṛṣi (ārṣeya).<sup>49</sup> But, on the other hand, there are clear traces of another doctrine, which requires learning, and not physical descent, as the true criterion of Ṛṣihood.<sup>50</sup> In agreement with this is the fact that Satyakāma Jābāla was received as a pupil, though his parentage was unknown, his mother being a slave girl who had been connected with several men,<sup>51</sup> and that in the Śatapatha

Brāhmaṇa<sup>52</sup> the ceremony on acceptance as a pupil required merely the name of the pupil. So Kavaṣa is taunted in the Rigveda Brāhmaṇas<sup>53</sup> as being the son of a female slave (Dāsī), and Vatsa cleared himself of a similar imputation by a fire ordeal.<sup>54</sup> Moreover, a very simple rite was adequate to remove doubts as to origin.<sup>55</sup> In these circumstances it is doubtful whether much value attaches to the Pravara lists in which the ancestors of the priest were invoked at the beginning of the sacrifice by the Hotṛ and the Adhvaryu priests.<sup>56</sup> Still, in many parts of the ritual the knowledge of two or more generations was needed,<sup>57</sup> and in one ceremony<sup>58</sup> ten ancestors who have drunk the Soma are required, but a literal performance of the rite is excused. Moreover, there are clear traces of ritual variations in schools, like those of the Vasiṣṭhas and the Viśvāmitras.

6. The Conduct of the Brahmin.—The Brahmin was required to maintain a fair standard of excellence.<sup>59</sup> He was to be kind to all<sup>60</sup> and gentle,<sup>61</sup> offering sacrifice and receiving gifts.<sup>62</sup> Especial stress was laid on purity of speech;<sup>63</sup> thus Viśvantara's excuse for excluding the Śyāparṇas from his retinue was their impure (apūtā) speech.<sup>64</sup> Theirs was the craving for knowledge<sup>65</sup> and the life of begging.<sup>66</sup> False Brahmins are those who do not fulfil their duties<sup>67</sup> (cf. Brahmapandhu).

7. Brahminical Studies.—The aim of the priest is to obtain pre-eminence in sacred knowledge (brahma-varcasam), as is stated in numerous passages of Vedic literature.<sup>69</sup> Such distinction is not indeed confined to the Brahmin: the king has it also, but it is not really in a special manner appropriate to the Kṣatriya.<sup>70</sup> Many ritual acts are specified as leading to Brahmaparcasa,<sup>71</sup> but more stress is laid on the study of the sacred texts: the importance of such study is repeatedly insisted upon.<sup>72</sup>

The technical name for study is Svādhyāya: the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa is eloquent upon its advantages,<sup>73</sup> and it is asserted that the joy of the learned Śrotriya, or 'student,' is equal to the highest joy possible.<sup>74</sup> Nāka Maudgalya held that study and the teaching of others were the true penance (tapas).<sup>75</sup> The object was the 'threefold knowledge' (trayī vidyā), that of the R̥c, Yajus, and Sāman,<sup>76</sup> a student of all three Vedas being called tri-śukriya<sup>77</sup> or tri-śukra,<sup>78</sup> 'thrice pure.' Other objects of study are enumerated in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>79</sup> in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka,<sup>80</sup> the Chāndogya Upaniṣad,<sup>81</sup> etc. (See Itihāsa, Purāṇa; Gāthā, Nārāśaṃsī; Brahmodya; Anuśāsana, Anuvyākhyāna, Anvākhyāna, Kalpa, 2. Directions as to the exact place and time of study are given in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka<sup>82</sup> and in the Sūtras. If study is carried on in the village, it is to be done silently (manasā); if outside, aloud (vācā).

Learning is expected even from persons not normally competent as teachers, such as the Carakas, who are recognized in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>83</sup> as possible sources of information. Here, too, may be mentioned the cases of Brahmins learning from princes, though their absolute value is doubtful, for the priests would naturally represent their patrons as interested in their sacred science: it is thus not necessary to see in these notices any real and independent study on the part of the Kṣatriyas.<sup>84</sup> Yājñavalkya learnt from Janaka,<sup>85</sup> Uddālaka Āruṇi and two other Brahmins from Pravāhaṇa Jaivali,<sup>86</sup> Dṛptabālāki Gārgya from Ajātaśatru,<sup>87</sup> and five Brahmins under the lead of Aruṇa from Aśvapati Kaikeya.<sup>88</sup> A few notices show the real educators of thought: wandering scholars went through the country<sup>89</sup> and engaged in disputes and discussions in which a prize was staked by the disputants.<sup>90</sup> Moreover, kings like Janaka offered rewards to the most learned of the Brahmins;<sup>91</sup> Ajātaśatru was jealous of his renown, and imitated his generosity. Again, learned women are several times mentioned in the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>92</sup>

A special form of disputation was the Brahmodya, for which there was a regular place at the Aśvamedha ('horse sacrifice')<sup>93</sup> and at the Daśarātra ('ten-day festival').<sup>94</sup> The reward of learning was the gaining of the title of Kavi or Vipra, 'sage.'<sup>95</sup>

8. The Functions of the Brahmin.—The Brahmin was required not merely to practise individual culture, but also to give others the advantage of his skill, either as a teacher or as a sacrificial priest, or as a Purohita.

As a teacher the Brahmin has, of course, the special duty of instructing his own son in both study and sacrificial ritual.<sup>96</sup> The texts give examples of this, such as Āruṇi and Śvetaketu,<sup>97</sup> or mythically Varuṇa and Bhṛgu.<sup>98</sup> This fact also appears from some of the names in the Vamśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>99</sup> of the Sāmaveda and the Vamśa (list of teachers) of the Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka.<sup>100</sup> On the other hand, these Vamśas and the Vamśas of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa show that a father often preferred to let his son study under a famous teacher. The relation of pupil and teacher is described under Brahmacarya. A teacher might take several pupils,<sup>101</sup> and he was bound to teach them with all his heart and soul.<sup>102</sup> He was bound to reveal everything to his pupil, at any rate to one who was staying with him for a year (saṃvatsara-vāsin),<sup>103</sup> an expression which shows, as was natural, that a pupil might easily change teachers. But, nevertheless, certain cases of learning kept secret and only revealed to special persons are enumerated.<sup>104</sup> The exact times and modes of teaching are elaborately laid down in the Sūtras,<sup>105</sup> but not in the earlier texts.

As priest the Brahmin operated in all the greater sacrifices; the simple domestic (grhya) rites could normally be performed without his help, but not the more important rites (śrauta).

Śaṅkara, in his commentary, takes the word to mean the 'giving of instruction,' but this must be regarded as improbable, 'rule' being more probably the sense. Cf. Weber, Indische Studien, 10, 128; Böhlingk, Translation of the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad, iii. 8, 9.

The number varied : the ritual literature requires sixteen priests to be employed at the greatest sacrifices (see Rtvij), but other rites could be accomplished with four,<sup>106</sup> five,<sup>107</sup> six,<sup>108</sup> seven,<sup>109</sup> or ten<sup>110</sup> priests. Again, the Kauṣītakins<sup>111</sup> had a seventeenth priest beside the usual sixteen, the Sadasya, so called because he watched the performance from the Sadas, 'seat.' In one rite, the Sattrā ('sacrificial session') of the serpents, the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa,<sup>112</sup> adds three more to the sixteen, a second Unnetṛ, an Abhigara, and an Apagara. The later ritual places the Brahman at the head of all the priests, but this is probably not the early view (see Brahman).

The sacrifice ensured, if properly performed, primarily the advantages of the sacrificer (yajamāna),<sup>113</sup> but the priest shared in the profit, besides securing the Dakṣiṇās. Disputes between sacrificers and the priests were not rare, as in the case of Viśvantara and the Śyāparṇas,<sup>114</sup> or Janamejaya and the Asitamṛgas;<sup>115</sup> and the Aiśāvīras are referred to as undesirable priests.<sup>116</sup> Moreover, Viśvāmitra once held the post of Purohita to Sudās, but gave place to Vasiṣṭha.

The position of Purohita differed considerably from that of the ordinary priest, for the Purohita not merely might officiate at the sacrifice, but was the officiator in all the private sacrifices of his king. Hence he could, and undoubtedly sometimes did, obtain great influence over his master in matters of secular importance; and the power of the priesthood in political as opposed to domestic and religious matters, no doubt rested on the Purohita.

There is no recognition in Vedic literature of the rule later prevailing by which, after spending part of his life as a Brahmacārin, and part as a householder, the Brahmin became an ascetic<sup>117</sup> (later divided into the two stages of Vānaprastha, 'forest-dweller,' and Saṃnyāsin, 'mystic'). Yājñavalkya's case<sup>118</sup> shows that study of the Absolute might empty life of all its content for the sage, and drive him to abandon wife and family. In Buddhist times the same phenomenon is seen<sup>119</sup> applying to other than Brahmins. The Buddhist texts are here confirmed in some degree by the Greek authorities.<sup>120</sup> The practice bears a certain resemblance to the habit of kings, in the Epic tradition,<sup>121</sup> of retiring to the forest when active life is over.

From the Greek authorities<sup>122</sup> it also appears — what is certainly the case in the Buddhist literature<sup>123</sup> — that Brahmins practised the most diverse occupations. It is difficult to say how far this was true for the Vedic period. The analogy of the Druids<sup>124</sup> — in some respects very close — suggests that the Brahmins may have been mainly confined to their professional tasks, including all the learned professions such as astronomy<sup>125</sup> and so forth. This is not contradicted by any Vedic evidence; for instance, the poet of a hymn of the Rigveda<sup>126</sup> says he is a poet, his father a physician (Bhīṣaj), and his mother a grinder of corn (Upala-prakṣiṇī). This would seem to show that a Brahmin could be a doctor, while his wife would perform the ordinary household duties. So a Purohita could perhaps take the field to assist the king by prayer, as Viśvāmitra,<sup>127</sup> and later on Vasiṣṭha<sup>128</sup> do, but this does not show that priests normally fought. Nor do they seem normally to have been agriculturists or merchants. On the other hand, they kept cattle: a Brahmacārin's duty was to watch his master's cattle.<sup>129</sup> It is therefore needless to suppose that they could not, and did not, on occasion turn to agricultural or mercantile pursuits, as they certainly did later. But it must be remembered that in all probability there was more purity of blood, and less pressure of life, among the Brahmins of the Vedic age than later in Buddhist times, when the Vedic sacrificial apparatus was falling into grave disrepute.

It is clear that the Brahmins, whatever their defects, represented the intellectual side of Vedic life, and that the Kṣatriyas, if they played a part in that life, did so only in a secondary degree, and to a minor extent. It is natural to suppose that the Brahmins also composed ballads, the precursors of the epic; for though none such have survived, a few stanzas of this character, celebrating the generosity of patrons, have been preserved by being embedded in priestly compositions. A legend in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>130</sup> shows clearly that the Brahmins regarded civilization as being spread by them only:

Almost all that can be said of the Brahmins is collected in Weber's Indische Studien, 10, 40-158. Cf. also Ludwig, Translation of the Rigveda, 3, 220-226; Fick, Die sociale Gliederung

Muir, Sanskrit Texts, 1<sup>2</sup>, 248 et seq., discusses the priesthood in the Rigveda, and Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 197-212, gives an excellent summary of the facts.

Kosala and Videha, no doubt settled by Āryan tribes, are only rendered civilized and habitable by the influence of pious Brahmins. We need not doubt that the non-Brahminical tribes (see Vrātya) had attained intellectual as well as material civilization, but it is reasonable to assume that their civilization was inferior to that of the Brahmins, for the history of Hinduism is the conquest by the Brahmins—not by arms, but by mind—of the tribes Āryan and non-Āryan originally beyond the pale.

Bhaginī, 'sister,' literally the 'fortunate one' in so far as she has a brother, occurs in the Nirukta (iii. 6).

Bhagī-ratha Aikṣvāka ('descendant of Ikṣvāku') is the name of a king in the Jaiminiya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa (iv. 6, 1. 2). It is important to note that he is regarded as being on friendly terms with the Kuru-Paṇḍalas, which points to the Ikṣvākus being allied to that people, and not belonging (as is the case in the Buddhist books) to the east of India.

Bhaṅga, 'hemp,' is mentioned in the Atharvaveda.<sup>1</sup> In the Rigveda<sup>2</sup> it is an epithet of Soma, presumably<sup>3</sup> in the sense of 'intoxicating,' which then came to designate hemp.<sup>4</sup>

Bhaya-da Āsamātya ('descendant of Asamāti') is the name of a king in the Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa.<sup>1</sup> Oertel,<sup>2</sup> however, seems to take the name as Abhayada, but this is not probable, for Bhayada is a name in the Purāṇas.

Bharata is the name of a people of great importance in the Rigveda and the later literature. In the Rigveda they appear prominently in the third and seventh Maṇḍalas in connexion with Sudās and the Tṛtsus,<sup>1</sup> while in the sixth Maṇḍala they are associated with Divodāsa.<sup>2</sup> In one passage<sup>3</sup> the Bharatas are, like the Tṛtsus, enemies of the Pūrus: there can be little doubt that Ludwig's view of the identity of the Bharatas and and Tṛtsus is practically correct. More precisely Oldenberg<sup>5</sup> considers that the Tṛtsus are the Vasiṣṭhas, the family singers of the Bharatas; while Geldner<sup>6</sup> recognizes, with perhaps more probability, in the Tṛtsus the royal family of the Bharatas. That the Tṛtsus and Bharatas were enemies, as Zimmer<sup>7</sup> holds, is most improbable even on geographical grounds, for the Tṛtsus in Zimmer's view<sup>8</sup> occupied the country to the east of the Paruṣṇī (Ravi), and the Bharatas must therefore be regarded as coming against the Tṛtsus from the west, whereas the Rīgveda<sup>9</sup> recognizes two Bharata chiefs on the Sarasvatī, Āpayā, and Dṛṣadvatī—that is, in the holy land of India, the Madhyadeśa. Hillebrandt<sup>10</sup> sees in the connexion of the Tṛtsus and the Bharatas a fusion of two tribes; but this is not supported by any evidence beyond the fact that in his opinion some such theory is needed to explain Divodāsa's appearing in connexion with the Bharadvāja family, while Sudās, his son, or perhaps grandson (cf. Pijavana), is connected with the Vasiṣṭhas and the Viśvāmitras.

In the later literature the Bharatas appear as especially famous. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>11</sup> mentions Bharata Dauḥṣanti as a king, sacrificer of the Aśvamedha ('horse sacrifice') and Śātānīka Sātrājita, as another Bharata who offered that sacrifice. The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>12</sup> mentions Bharata Dauḥṣanti as receiving the kingly coronation from Dīrghatamas Māmateya, and Śātānīka as being consecrated by Somasuśman Vājaratnāyana, a priest whose name is of quite late origin. The geographical position of the Bharata people is clearly shown by the fact that the Bharata kings win victories over the Kāśis, and make offerings on the Yamunā (Jumna) and Gaṅgā (Ganges).<sup>13</sup> Moreover, in the formula of the king's proclamation for the people, the variants recorded<sup>14</sup> include Kuravaḥ, Pañcālāḥ, Kuru-Pañcālāḥ, and Bharatāḥ; and the Mahābhārata consistently recognizes the royal family of the Kurus as a Bharata family.<sup>15</sup> It is therefore extremely probable that Oldenberg<sup>16</sup> is right in holding that the Bharatas in the times of the Brāhmaṇas were merging in the Kuru-Pañcāla people.

<sup>18</sup> ii. 25; iii. 18. The sense 'mercenary soldier,' here seen by the St. Petersburg Dictionary, s.v. 2 (no longer mentioned in the Dictionary of Böhtlingk), cannot be accepted. See Weber, Indische Studien, 9, 254; Oldenberg, Buddha, 407, n. On the other hand, there is no mention of the Bharatas in the geographical lists of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (viii. 14), in the Mānava Dharma Śāstra, or in the Buddhist texts. This means that the Bharatas were no longer a people, but a family or sub-tribe in a larger people.

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>19</sup> and the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka.<sup>20</sup> Already in the Rīgveda<sup>21</sup> there is mention made of Agni Bhārata ('of the Bharatas'). In the Āprī hymns<sup>22</sup> occurs a goddess Bhārati, the personified divine protective power of the Bharatas: her association in the hymns with Sarasvatī reflects the connexion of the Bharatas with the Sarasvatī in the Rīgveda.<sup>9</sup> Again, in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>23</sup> Agni is referred to as brāhmaṇa Bhārata, 'priest of the Bharatas,' and is invited to dispose of the offering Manuṣvat Bharatavat, 'like Manu,' 'like Bharata.'<sup>24</sup>

In one or two passages<sup>25</sup> Sudās or Divodāsa and, on the other hand, Purukutsa or Trasadasyu appear in a friendly relation. Possibly this points, as Oldenberg<sup>26</sup> suggests, to the union of Bharatas and Pūrus with the Kurus.

A Bharata is referred to in the fifth Maṇḍala of the Rīgveda:<sup>27</sup> who he was is uncertain.

Bharadvāja is the name of the reputed<sup>1</sup> author of the sixth Maṇḍala of the Rīgveda. The attribution is so far correct that Bharadvāja<sup>2</sup> and the Bharadvājas<sup>3</sup> are repeatedly mentioned as singers in that Maṇḍala. Judging by the tone of the references to Bharadvāja, he can hardly be deemed to have been a contemporary of any of the hymns.<sup>4</sup> According to the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa,<sup>5</sup> he was the Purohita of Divodāsa. This interpretation is to be preferred to that of Roth,<sup>6</sup> who suggests that he and Divodāsa were identical. His connexion with the house of Divodāsa also appears from the statement of the Kāthaka Samhitā<sup>7</sup> that Bharadvāja gave Pratardana the kingdom. It is unnecessary to suppose that the same Bharadvāja was meant in both cases, and that Pratardana was a son of Divodāsa : the later Samhitās refer to Bharadvāja, like the other great sages, irrespective of chronology.

The Bharadvājas in their poems mention Br̥bu, Br̥saya, and the Pārāvatas.<sup>8</sup> Hillebrandt<sup>9</sup> has pointed out that they are also connected with the Śr̥ñjayas. In particular, the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra<sup>10</sup> mentions that Bharadvāja gained largesse from Prastoka Sārñjaya and Br̥bu. But it is very doubtful if it is correct to place all these people and Divodāsa in Arachosia and Drangiana.

Bharadvāja as an author and a seer is frequently referred to in the later Samhitās<sup>11</sup> and the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>12</sup>

Bhāvayavya. See Bhāvya.

Bhāvya is the name of a patron, as it seems, in the Rigveda.<sup>1</sup> In the Sāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra<sup>2</sup> the form given is Bhāvayavya, being a patronymic of Svanaya, who is the patron of Kakṣivant. This combination is borne out by the Rigveda, where Kakṣivant and Svanaya are mentioned in the same verse,<sup>3</sup> while Svanaya must be meant in the verse of the same hymn,<sup>4</sup> where Bhāvya is mentioned as 'living on the Sindhu' (Indus). Roth's<sup>5</sup> view that Bhāvya here is perhaps a gerundive meaning to be 'reverenced' is not probable. Ludwig<sup>6</sup> thinks Svanaya was connected with the Nahuṣas.

despised. This dislike is found as early as the Yajurveda Samhitās,<sup>7</sup> where the Aśvins are condemned because of their having to do with the practice of medicine (bheṣaja), on the ground that it brings them too much among men, an allusion to the caste dislike of promiscuous contact.

The Rīgveda<sup>8</sup> contains a hymn in which a physician celebrates his plants and their healing powers. Moreover, wonderful cures are referred to as performed by the Aśvins: the healing of the lame<sup>9</sup> and of the blind;<sup>10</sup> the rejuvenation of the aged Cyavana<sup>11</sup> and of Puramdhi's husband;<sup>12</sup> the giving of an iron leg (jaṅghā āyāsī) to Viśpalā,<sup>13</sup> a deed only more wonderful if we assume that Viśpalā was a mare, as has been suggested by Pischel.<sup>14</sup> It would in all probability be a mistake to assume<sup>15</sup> that the Vedic Indians had any surgical skill: they no doubt applied simples to wounds,<sup>16</sup> but both their medicine and their surgery must have been most primitive. All that the Atharvaveda shows in regard to medicine is the use of herbs combined with spells,<sup>17</sup> and of water (cf. Jalāṣa), remedies Indo-European in character, but not of much scientific value. On the other hand, the knowledge of anatomy shown (see Śarīra), though betraying grave inaccuracies, is not altogether insignificant; but that was due no doubt mainly to the practice of dissecting animals at the sacrifice.

There is some evidence in the Rīgveda<sup>18</sup> that the practice of medicine was already a profession; this is supported by the inclusion of a physician in the list of victims at the Puruṣamedha ('human sacrifice') in the Yajurveda.<sup>19</sup> According to

In the later literature the Bhṛgus are a real family, with subdivisions like the Aitaśāyana, according to the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa.<sup>8</sup> The Bhṛgus are mentioned as priests in connexion with various rites, such as the Agnisthāpana<sup>9</sup> and the Daśapeyakratu.<sup>10</sup> In many passages they are conjoined with the Aṅgirasas:<sup>11</sup> the close association of the two families is shown

<sup>3</sup> Rv. i. 58, 6; 127, 7; 143, 4; ii. 4, 2; iii. 2, 4; iv. 7, 1, etc. See Macdonell, Vedic Mythology, 51. The legend of their chariot-making (Rv. iv. 16, 20; x. 39, 14) may be due, as Roth, St. Petersburg Dictionary, s.v., suggests, to a confusion with the Ṛbhus. It may, however, be an allusion to the historic Bhṛgus, whom we find in the battle of the ten kings.

<sup>4</sup> As shown by the legend of fire having been brought to them by Mātariśvan, Rv. iii. 5, 10.

<sup>5</sup> i. 60, 1, where, however, Roth, loc. cit., takes the singular in a collective sense, an interpretation which may be correct, but is not necessary.

<sup>6</sup> Rv. vii. 18, 6; viii. 3, 9; 6, 18, to which list, given by Macdonell, loc. cit., Roth adds viii. 102, 4, Aurva-Bhṛgu-vat, 'like Aurva and Bhṛgu.' Cf. the fact that the Aurvas, in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, vi. 33, take the place of the Bhṛgus of the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa, xxx. 5.

<sup>7</sup> In viii. 3, 9; 6, 18; 102, 4, the reference to a priestly family is the more natural; in vii. 18, 6, warriors may be meant. Cf. Hopkins, Journal of the American Oriental Society, 15, 262, n., where he cites ix. 101, 13, as perhaps denoting the same thing.

Bheda, one of the enemies of Sudās and the Tr̥tsu-Bharatas, was defeated by the former in the Yamunā (Jumna),<sup>1</sup> apparently in a second conflict fought after the battle of the ten kings, in which Sudās successfully defended his western frontier against the confederate foes. The Ajas, Śigrus, and Yakṣus, who are mentioned as also defeated, may have been united under his leadership if he was a king; or the Bhedas may have been a separate people, as Roth<sup>2</sup> thinks. 2. Bheda is mentioned in the Atharvaveda<sup>1</sup> as having come to a bad end because he refused a cow (vaśā) to Indra when asked for it. That he is different from the preceding Bheda, as Roth<sup>2</sup> assumes, is not certain. Indeed, it may very well be that his defeat led to his being chosen as the representative of the evil end of the wicked man. Moreover, the irreligious character of Bheda may be ascribed to his being a leader of non-Āryan folk, if the Ajas and Śigrus, with whom in the Rigveda he is connected or associated were, as is possible, though by no means certain, un-Āryan tribes of totemists.<sup>3</sup>

Most of the medical practices of the Atharvaveda are merely examples of sympathetic magic. For example, in one hymn<sup>7</sup> the yellow of jaundice is entreated to pass into yellow birds. In another<sup>8</sup> fever is to be banished by means of a frog; for the frog, being a potent means of cooling fire<sup>9</sup> (because of its association with water), is regarded as analogously effective in banishing the fire of fever. Bhrātṛ is the common designation of 'brother' from the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> onwards. The word is also applied to a relation or close friend generally,<sup>2</sup> but here the persons concerned are, it should be noted, in the Rigveda<sup>3</sup> deities, who are brothers of one another or of the worshipper. Thus in the early literature the word has not really lost its precise sense. The derivation from the root bhr, 'support,' is probably correct, designating the brother as the support of his sister. This harmonizes with the fact that in Vedic literature the brother plays the part of protector of his sister when bereft of her father, and that maidens deprived of their brothers (abhrātṛ) meet an evil fate.<sup>4</sup> The gradation of the relations in the home is shown by the order in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad,<sup>5</sup> where father, mother, brother, and sister are successively mentioned. Strife between brothers is occasionally referred to.<sup>6</sup>

Bhrātṛvya is found in one passage of the Atharvaveda,<sup>1</sup> where, being named with brother and sister, it must be an expression of relationship. The sense appears to be ' (father's) brother's son,' 'cousin,'<sup>2</sup> this meaning alone accounting for the sense of 'rival,' 'enemy,' found elsewhere in the Atharvaveda,<sup>3</sup> and repeatedly in the other Samhitās and the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>4</sup> In an undivided family the relations of cousins would easily develop into rivalry and enmity. The original meaning may, however, have been 'nephew,'<sup>5</sup> as the simple etymological sense would be 'brother's son'; but this seems not to account for the later meaning so well. The Kāṭhaka Samhitā<sup>6</sup> prescribes the telling of a falsehood to a Bhrātṛvya, who, further, is often given the epithets 'hating' (dviṣan) and 'evil' (apriya, pāpman) in the later Samhitās and the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>7</sup> The Atharvaveda<sup>8</sup> also contains various spells, which aim at destroying or expelling one's 'rivals.'

Makaka, a word occurring once in the Atharvaveda (viii. 6, 12), may be the name of some unknown animal; but it is possibly an adjective having some such sense as 'bleating.'

Magadha is the name of a people who appear throughout Vedic literature as of little repute. Though the name is not actually found in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> it occurs in the Atharvaveda,<sup>2</sup> where fever is wished away to the Gandhāris and Mūjavants, northern peoples, and to the Aṅgas and Magadhas, peoples of the east. Again, in the list of victims at the Puruṣamedha ('human sacrifice') in the Yajurveda,<sup>3</sup> the Māgadha, or man of Magadha, is included as dedicated to ati-kruṣṭa, 'loud noise' (?), while in the Vṛātya hymn of the Atharvaveda<sup>4</sup> the Māgadha is said to be connected with the Vṛātya as his Mitra, his Mantra, his laughter, and his thunder in the four quarters. In the Śrauta Sūtras<sup>5</sup> the equipment characteristic of the Vṛātya is said to be given, when the latter is admitted into the Āryan Brahminical community, to a bad Brahmin living in Magadha (brahma-bandhu Māgadha-deśīya), but this point does not occur in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa.<sup>6</sup> On the other hand, respectable Brahmins sometimes lived there, for the Kauṣītaki Āraṇyaka<sup>7</sup> mentions Madhyama, Prātibodhī-putra, as Magadha-vāsin, 'living in Magadha.' Oldenberg,<sup>8</sup> however, seems clearly right in regarding this as unusual.

The Magadhas are evidently a people in the Baudhāyana and other Sūtras,<sup>9</sup> possibly also in the Aitareya Āraṇyaka.<sup>10</sup> It is therefore most improbable that Zimmer<sup>11</sup> can be right in thinking that in the Yajurveda<sup>3</sup> and the Atharvaveda<sup>4</sup> the Māgadha is not a man of Magadha, but a member of the mixed caste produced by a Vaisya marrying a Kṣatriya woman.<sup>12</sup> But the theory of mixed castes, in any case open to some doubt, cannot be accepted when used to explain such obviously tribal names as Māgadha. The fact that the Māgadha is often in later times a minstrel is easily accounted for by the assumption that the country was the home of minstrelsy, and that wandering bards from Magadha were apt to visit the more western lands. This class the later texts recognize as a caste, inventing an origin by intermarriage of the old-established castes.

The dislike of the Magadhas, which may be Rigvedic, since the Kikāṭas were perhaps the prototype of the Magadhas, was in all probability due, as Oldenberg<sup>13</sup> thinks, to the fact that the Magadhas were not really Brahminized. This is entirely in accord with the evidence of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>14</sup> that neither Kosala nor Videha were fully Brahminized at an early date, much less Magadha. Weber<sup>15</sup> suggests two other grounds that may have influenced the position—the persistence of aboriginal blood and the growth of Buddhism. The latter consideration is hardly applicable to the Yajurveda or the Atharvaveda; but the imperfect Brahminization of the land, if substituted for it in accordance with Oldenberg's suggestion, would have some force. The former motive, despite Oldenberg's doubt, seems fully justified. Pargiter<sup>16</sup> has gone so far as to suggest that in Magadha the Āryans met and mingled with a body of invaders from the east by sea. Though there is no evidence for this view in the Vedic texts, it is reasonable to suppose that the farther east the Āryans penetrated, the less did they impress themselves upon the aborigines. Modern ethnology confirms this a priori supposition in so far as it shows Āryan types growing less and less marked as the eastern part of India is reached, although such evidence is not decisive in view of the great intermixture of peoples in India.

Maṅgala is the name of a teacher in the Baudhāyana Śrauta Sūtra (xxvi. 2).

Maṅgīra is found in an obscure verse in the Vaitāna<sup>1</sup> and other<sup>2</sup> Sūtras with reference to cows. It is quite uncertain whether a river or a man<sup>3</sup> is meant. The Gaṅgā (Ganges) and the Yamunā (Jumna) are mentioned in the same verse. The correct form of the word is doubtful.<sup>4</sup>

Mañjiṣṭhā, 'madder,' is mentioned in the Aitareya (iii. 2, 4) and Śāṅkhāyana (viii. 7) Āraṇyakas.

Maṭaci occurs in a passage of the Chāndogya Upaniṣad,<sup>1</sup> where reference is made to the Kurus being overwhelmed by Maṭacis.<sup>2</sup> Śaṅkara interprets the word by 'thunderbolts' (aśanayaḥ), while Ānandatīrtha in his commentary gives, as an alternative rendering, pāṣāṇa-vṛṣṭayaḥ—i.e., 'hailstones,' which may be the sense. The Śabdakalpadruma,<sup>3</sup> agreeing with Ānandatīrtha,<sup>4</sup> says that Maṭaci means 'a kind of small red bird' (rakta-varṇa-kṣudra-pakṣi-viśeṣa, reading -pakṣi-), and Jacob<sup>5</sup> suggests that the 'locust' is meant.

Maṇi is the name in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later<sup>2</sup> of a 'jewel' used as an amulet against all kinds of evil. That either 'pearl'<sup>3</sup> or 'diamond'<sup>4</sup> is denoted is not clear.<sup>5</sup> It is evident that the Maṇi could be strung on a thread (sūtra), which is referred to in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>6</sup> and elsewhere;<sup>7</sup> the Maṇi was certainly also worn round the neck, for in the Rigveda<sup>8</sup> occurs the epithet maṇi-grīva, 'having a jewel on the neck.' An amulet of Bilva is celebrated in the Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka,<sup>9</sup> and many varieties of amulet are there enumerated.<sup>10</sup> The 'jeweller' (maṇi-kāra) is mentioned in the list of victims at the Puruṣamedha ('human sacrifice') in the Yajurveda.<sup>11</sup>

as they awake to activity at the beginning of the rains. It has been explained by Max Müller<sup>5</sup> as a satire on the Brahmins. Geldner,<sup>6</sup> agreeing with this view, thinks that it is directed by its Vasiṣṭha composer against rival Brahmins, probably the Viśvāmitras.<sup>7</sup> The view, however, which interprets the hymn as a rain charm<sup>8</sup> seems on the whole more likely. The frog, from its connexion with water, was considered to have cooling properties. Thus after the burning of the dead body the frog is invited to come to the spot where the cremation has taken place in order to cool it down.<sup>9</sup> Similarly the frog is invoked in the Atharvaveda against the fire of fever.<sup>10</sup>

Upaniṣad, i. 2; mahā-matsya, 'great fish,' Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad, iv. 3, 18. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiii. 4, 3, 12 (cf. Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra, x. 7, 8; Sāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra, xvi. 2, 23), a Matsya Sāmmada is personified as the king of the fishes.

2. Matsya appears to be the name of a people in one passage of the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> where they are ranged with the other enemies of Sudās, although it is possible to see merely the sense of 'fish' in that passage. In the list of Aśvamedhins, 'offerers of the horse sacrifice,' in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>2</sup> Dhvasan Dvaitavana is mentioned as a Matsya king (Mātsya). The Matsyas as a people occur also in the Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad<sup>3</sup> in connexion with the Vāsas,<sup>4</sup> and in the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>5</sup> in connexion with Śālvas. In Manu<sup>6</sup> the Kurukṣetra, the Matsyas, the Pañcālas, and the Śūrasenakas comprise the land of the Brahmin R̥ṣis (brahmar̥ṣi-dēśa). There is no reason to doubt that the Matsyas occupied much the same territory as in Epic times, say Alwar, Jaipur, Bharatpur.<sup>7</sup>

The Madras mentioned in the Upaniṣad were, like the Kurus, probably settled somewhere in Kurukṣetra in the Madhyadeśa or 'Middle Land.' Cf. Madragāra.

The Mānava Dharma Śāstra,<sup>8</sup> in accord with the Vasiṣṭha Dharma Sūtra,<sup>9</sup> defines Āryāvarta as the region between the Vindhya and the Himālaya, the two ranges which seem to be the boundaries of the Āryan world in the Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad also.<sup>10</sup>

The term Madhyadeśa is not Vedic, but it is represented in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>11</sup> by the expression madhyamā pratisthā diś, 'the middle fixed region,' the inhabitants of which are stated to be the Kurus, the Pañcālas, the Vaśas, and the Uśīnaras. The latter two peoples practically disappear later on, the Madhyadeśa being the country of the Kuru-Pañcālas, the land where the Brāhmaṇas and the later Saṃhitās were produced, bounded on the east by the Kosala-Videhas, and on the west by the desert. The western tribes are mentioned with disapproval both in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>12</sup> and the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>13</sup> while the tradition of the Brahminization of the Kosalas and the Videhas from the Kuru-Pañcāla country is preserved in the former Brāhmaṇa.<sup>14</sup>

<sup>7</sup> The readings are doubtful, varying between sindhur vidharaṇī or vidharaṇī and sindhur vicaraṇī or visaraṇī. The latter expression must refer to the Sarasvatī; the former may, but not necessarily. Conceivably the Sindhu (Indus) is meant; for it was a great boundary, with Āryan tribes to the east of it.

See also for the Buddhist 'Middle Country' an article by Rhys Davids, Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, 1904, 83 et seq., with Fleet's corrections, ibid., 1907, 657; and cf. Keith, ibid., 1908, 1143; Max Müller, Sacred Books of the East, 32, 58, 59; Indian Empire, 1, 303, 304, where the extraordinary theory is adopted that the Madhyadeśa was peopled by a new race of immigrant Āryans, who, travelling via Chitral and Gilgit, and bringing no women with them, married Dravidian women, and produced the so-called Āryo-Dravidians. It is quite impossible to find any support for this theory in Vedic literature. To say, as is there said, that the 'Vedic hymns contain no reference to the route by which the Āryans entered India or to their earlier settlements on the Indus,' and that this is explained by the theory of the entry of the Vedic Indians viā Chitral, is to assert absurdities. The theory is based on the later dialects and their affinities (see Grierson, Indian Empire, I, 357 et seq.); it can probably not be regarded as at all valid for any period—at any rate, it is not cogent for the eighth century, B.C.

Madhyama-vah occurs in one passage of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> as an epithet of the chariot. The exact interpretation is doubtful. Roth<sup>2</sup> assigns to it the expression the sense of 'driving with a single horse between the shafts.' According to Sāyana's explanation, it means 'driving with middling speed.' It might mean 'driving in the middle'—that is, 'only half-way.'<sup>3</sup>

The context seems to require the sense of 'keeping away' from the sacrifice.

Madhyama-śi is found in one passage of the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> where Roth<sup>2</sup> assigns to the word the meaning of intercessor, which Zimmer<sup>3</sup> accepts, in the sense of 'mediator' or 'arbiter,' as a legal term, but which Roth may, as Lanman<sup>4</sup> suggests, have intended to express 'adversary' or 'preventer' of the disease referred to in the hymn. Whitney<sup>5</sup> thinks that it means 'mid-

Manā is found in one passage of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> in an enumeration of gifts, where it is described as 'golden' (sacā manā hiranyayā). It therefore seems to designate some ornament, or possibly a weight, and has accordingly been compared<sup>2</sup> with the Greek μνᾶ (Herodotus has μνῆα), the Latin mina. All three words have been considered Semitic in origin, as borrowed from the Phœnicians<sup>3</sup> in the case of Greece, from Carthage by way of Etruria or Sicily in the case of Rome, and from Babylon in the case of India. The identification as regards Manā is very conjectural, depending merely on the probabilities of Babylonian borrowing<sup>4</sup> seen—e.g., in the legend of the flood, and in the system of the Nakṣatras. On the other hand, Manā may very well be identical with the word manā which occurs several times in the Rigveda<sup>5</sup> in the sense of 'desire' (from the root man, 'think'), and which may have in this one passage the concrete sense of 'desirable object.' It is to be noted that in Böhrtlingk's Dictionary a single word Manā appears, to which the only senses assigned are 'wish,' 'desire,' 'jealousy.'

Manu in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later<sup>2</sup> has no claim to historical reality. He is simply the first man, father of the race, and its guide in all matters, sacrificial and other. Hence the views of the texts on inheritance are foisted on Manu and his youngest son, Nābhānediṣṭha.<sup>3</sup> He also plays the part of the hero in the Vedic legend of the flood.<sup>4</sup>

Manthāvala is the name of an animal in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>1</sup> a sort of snake according to the St. Petersburg Dictionary. Mandīra is perhaps the name of a man whose cattle, according to a Mantra in the Kātyāyana Śrauta Sūtra (xiii. 3, 21), did not drink the water of the Gaṅgā (Ganges). See Maṅgīra.

1. Mandhātṛ occurs in several passages of the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> in all of which Roth<sup>2</sup> takes the word as merely an adjective used substantively, 'the pious man.' In one passage<sup>3</sup> the word, being applied to Agni, is thus used, but in another<sup>4</sup> Mandhātṛvat being parallel with Aṅgirasvat, 'like Aṅgiras,' is naturally to be understood as a proper name, which is probably also the sense of the word in the preceding hymn.<sup>5</sup> A different Mandhātṛ<sup>6</sup> may be meant in the first Maṇḍala,<sup>7</sup> where he is mentioned as a protégé of the Aśvins, and evidently as a king. To equate these persons, and make a Rājarsi out of Mandhātṛ, as Ludwig<sup>8</sup> and Griffith<sup>9</sup> do, is unnecessary and improbable.

Maya is found once in the Vājasaneyi Samhitā (xxii. 19) in the sense of 'horse.'

The former sense is supported by another passage of the Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā,<sup>2</sup> where the Mayu, being a substitute for the man, must be an ape. This sense also suits the word in the other passage<sup>3</sup> where it occurs.

The peacock also appears in the list of victims at the Aśvamedha ('horse sacrifice') in the Yajurveda Saṃhitās.<sup>3</sup> The pea-hen, Mayūrī, is mentioned in the Rigveda<sup>4</sup> and the Atharvaveda,<sup>5</sup> in both cases with reference to the bird's efficacy against poison, a curious superstition to be compared with the modern dislike of peacocks' feathers.

Marud-vṛdhā<sup>1</sup> is the name of a stream mentioned in the Nadīstuti ('Praise of Rivers') in the Rīgveda<sup>2</sup> along with the Asiknī (Akesines) and the Vitastā (Hydaspes). Roth<sup>3</sup> considers that the Marudvṛdhā denotes the stream formed by the combined waters of these two rivers down to its junction with the Paruṣṇī (Ravi), a view accepted by Zimmer.<sup>4</sup> On the other hand, Ludwig<sup>5</sup> thinks that the Marudvṛdhā designates essay on eclipses in the Rigveda (Proceedings of the Bohemian Academy, 1885), as a proof that the Vedic Ṛṣis knew of the moon as eclipsing the sun; but see Whitney's reply, Journal of the American Oriental Society, 13, lxi et seq., and Sūrya.

Markaṭa, 'ape,' is enumerated in the list of victims at the Aśvamedha ('horse sacrifice') in the Yajurveda Saṃhitās.<sup>1</sup> It is classified in the same Saṃhitās<sup>2</sup> with man and the elephant as 'taking hold by the hand' (hastādāna) instead of 'taking hold by the mouth' (mukhādāna). The animal is mentioned several times elsewhere also.<sup>3</sup> Cf. Puruṣa Hastin, Mayu.

1. Marya in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> denotes a 'man' especially regarded as young and a lover, being constantly mentioned as in company with maidens (yuvati).

<sup>3</sup> Rv. ix. 97, 18. Roth, St. Petersburg Dictionary, s.v. 2, thinks Rv. i. 91, 13, may have the same sense.

Maryaka, occurring only once in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> seems to denote the bull which is described as separated from the cows.

Atharvaveda, 392, suggests, owing to the very curious use of the word, the emendation marya-dā, 'giver of a son.'

Mala-ga in one passage of the Atharvaveda<sup>1</sup> denotes a cleanser of clothes, a 'washerman,' but the origin of the word is somewhat uncertain.<sup>2</sup>

Maha-rṣabha, a 'great bull,' is mentioned in the Atharva-veda (iv. 15, 1).

Maha-rṣi, a 'great Ṛṣi,' is mentioned in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka (i. 9, 6). Cf. Mahābrāhmaṇa.

Mahā-kula, 'sprung from a great family,' is the designation of a bowl or cup (Camasa) in the Rigveda (i. 161, 1). The metaphorical use of this word shows that the high position of certain families was already recognized in the times of the Rigveda.

Mahā-bhūta in the Nirukta (xiv. 5, 10) and the Aitareya Upaniṣad (iii. 2, 3) denotes the 'gross elements' (earth, water, fire, air, ether).

Mahā-matsya, a 'great fish,' is mentioned in the Bṛhad-āraṇyaka Upaniṣad (iv. 3, 18).

Mahā-rāja, a 'great king,' is frequently referred to in the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>1</sup> It seems to mean no more than a king, or rather perhaps a reigning and powerful king, as opposed to a mere prince, who would also be called Rājan.

Mahā-vṛkṣa, a 'great tree,' is mentioned sometimes in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa (vii. 6, 15; xiv. 1, 12) and in the Sūtras.

Mahā-vṛṣa is the name of a tribe mentioned along with the Mūjavants in the Atharvaveda<sup>1</sup> as a locality to which fever is to be relegated. It is reasonable to suppose that they were northerners, though Bloomfield<sup>2</sup> suggests that the name may be chosen more for its sound and sense (as 'of mighty strength' to resist the disease) than for its geographical position. In the Chāndogya Upaniṣad<sup>3</sup> the place Raikvaparna is said to be in the Mahāvṛṣa country. The king of the Mahāvṛṣas in the Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa<sup>4</sup> is said to be Hṛtsvāsaya. 1. Mahā-śāla (lit., 'having a great house'), a 'great householder,' is an expression applied in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (v. 11, 1) to the Brahmins who were instructed by Aśvapati, no doubt to emphasize their importance. Cf. Mahābrāhmaṇa.

Mahokṣa, a 'great bull,' is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (iii. 4, 1, 2).

Māmsa, 'flesh.' The eating of flesh appears as something quite regular in the Vedic texts, which show no trace of the doctrine of Ahimsā, or abstaining from injury to animals. For example, the ritual offerings of flesh contemplate that the gods will eat it, and again the Brahmins ate the offerings.<sup>1</sup> Again, the slaying of a 'great ox' (mahokṣa) or a 'great goat' (mahāja) for a guest was regularly prescribed;<sup>2</sup> and the name Atithigva probably means 'slaying cows for guests.'<sup>3</sup> The great sage Yājñavalkya was wont to eat the meat of milch cows and bullocks (dhenu-anaḍuha) if only it was aṃsala ('firm' or 'tender').<sup>4</sup> The slaughter of a hundred bulls (ukṣan) was credited to one sacrificer, Agastya.<sup>5</sup> The marriage ceremony was accompanied by the slaying of oxen, clearly for food.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> So Agni is called 'eater of ox and cow' in Rv. viii. 43, 11 = Av. iii. 21, 6 = Taittirīya Saṃhitā, i. 3, 14, 7; Weber, Indische Studien, 17, 280, 281; Oldenberg, Religion des Veda, 355.

That there was any general objection to the eating of flesh is most improbable. Sometimes it is forbidden, as when a man is performing a vow,<sup>7</sup> or its use is disapproved, as in a passage of the Atharvaveda,<sup>8</sup> where meat is classed with Surā, or intoxicating liquor, as a bad thing. Again, in the Rigveda<sup>9</sup> the slaying of the cows is said to take place in the Aghās, a deliberate variation for Maghās; but this may be the outcome merely of a natural association of death with gloom, even when cows alone are the victims in question. The Brāhmaṇas also contain the doctrine of the eater in this world being eaten in the next,<sup>10</sup> but this is not to be regarded as a moral or religious disapproval of eating flesh, though it no doubt contains the germ of such a view, which is also in harmony with the persuasion of the unity of existence, which becomes marked in the Brāhmaṇas. But Ahimsā as a developed and articulate doctrine would seem to have arisen from the acceptance of the doctrine of transmigration, which in its fundamentals is later than the Brāhmaṇa period.<sup>11</sup>

On the other hand, it is to be noted that the cow was on the road to acquire special sanctity in the Rigveda,<sup>12</sup> as is shown by the name aghnyā,<sup>13</sup> 'not to be slain,' applied to it in several passages. But this fact cannot be regarded as showing that meat eating generally was condemned. Apart from mythical considerations, such as the identification of the cow with earth or Aditi (which are, of course, much more than an effort of priestly ingenuity), the value of the cow for other purposes than eating was so great as to account adequately for its sanctity, the beginnings of which can in fact be traced back to Indo-Iranian times.<sup>14</sup> Moreover, the ritual of the cremation of the dead required the slaughter of a cow as an essential part, the flesh being used to envelope the dead body.<sup>15</sup>

The usual food of the Vedic Indian, as far as flesh was concerned, can be gathered from the list of sacrificial victims: what man ate he presented to the gods—that is, the sheep, the goat, and the ox. The horse sacrifice was an infrequent exception: it is probably not to be regarded as a trace of the use of horseflesh as food, though the possibility of such being the case cannot be overlooked in view of the widespread use of horseflesh as food in different countries and times. It is, however, more likely that the aim of this sacrifice was to impart magic strength, the speed and vigour of the horse, to the god and his worshippers, as Oldenberg<sup>16</sup> argues.

Mātur-bhrātra is a curiously formed compound, occurring once in the Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā<sup>1</sup> as a designation of the 'maternal uncle,' who in the Sūtra period bears the name of Mātula. Thus little is heard of the maternal uncle in the Vedic period: it is not till the Epic<sup>2</sup> that traces appear of his prominence as compared with the paternal uncle (pitṛvya). This fact is significant for the 'patriarchal' character of the early Indian family organization.<sup>3</sup>

Mātr is the regular word for 'mother' from the Rigveda onwards,<sup>1</sup> being a formation probably developed under the influence of an onomatopœtic word mā,<sup>2</sup> used like Ambā<sup>3</sup> and Nanā.<sup>4</sup>

The relations of wife and husband, as well as of mother and children, are treated under Pati. It remains only to add that details are given in the Sūtras<sup>5</sup> of the respectful attention paid to a mother, and of the ceremonies in which she is concerned. The mother also appears interested in the fate of her children as in the story of the sale of Śunaḥśepa for adoption by Viśvāmitra in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.<sup>6</sup>

Māsa denotes a 'month,' a period of time repeatedly mentioned in the Rigveda and later.

The characteristic days (or rather nights) of the month were those of the new moon, Amā-vasyā, 'home-staying (night),' and 'of the full moon,' Paurṇ-māsī. Two hymns of the Atharvaveda<sup>1</sup> celebrate these days respectively. A personification of the phases of the moon is seen in the four names Sinīvalī,<sup>2</sup>

the day before new moon; Kuhū,<sup>3</sup> also called Guṅgū,<sup>4</sup> the new moon day; Anumati,<sup>5</sup> the day before full moon; and Rākā,<sup>6</sup> the day of new moon. The importance of the new and full moon days is seen in the Darśa-pūrṇamāsau, or festivals of the new and full moon days respectively.

One special day in the month, the Ekāṣṭakā, or eighth day after full moon, was important. In the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>7</sup> there are stated to be in the year twelve such, mentioned between the twelve days of full moon and the twelve days of new moon. But one Ekāṣṭakā is referred to in the Yajurveda Saṃhitās and elsewhere<sup>8</sup> as of quite special importance. This was, in the accordant opinion of most commentators, the eighth day after the full moon of Māgha. It marked the end of the year, or the beginning of the new year. Though the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa<sup>9</sup> places the winter solstice in the new moon of Māgha, the latter date probably means the new moon preceding full moon in Māgha,<sup>10</sup> not the new moon following full moon; but it is perhaps possible to account adequately for the importance of the Ekāṣṭakā as being the first Aṣṭakā after the beginning of the new year.

It is not certain exactly how the month was reckoned, whether from the day after new moon to new moon—the system known as amānta, or from the day after full moon to full moon—the pūrṇimānta system, which later, at any rate, was followed in North India, while the other system prevailed in the south. Jacobi<sup>11</sup> argues that the year began in the full moon of Phālguna, and that only by the full moon's conjunction with the Nakṣatra could the month be known. Oldenberg<sup>12</sup> points to the fact that the new moon is far more distinctively an epoch than the full moon; that the Greek, Roman, and Jewish years began with the new moon; and that the Vedic evidence is the division of the month into the former (pūrva) and latter (āpara) halves, the first being the bright (śukla), the second the dark (kṛṣṇa) period. Thibaut<sup>13</sup> considers that to assume the existence of the pūrṇimānta system for the Veda is unnecessary, though possible. Weber<sup>10</sup> assumes that it occurs in the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa as held by the scholiasts. But it would probably be a mistake to press that passage, or to assume that the amānta system was rigidly accepted in the Veda: it seems at least as probable that the month was vaguely regarded as beginning with the new moon day, so that new moon preceded full moon, which was in the middle, not the end or the beginning of the month.

That a month regularly had 30 days is established by the conclusive evidence of numerous passages in which the year is given 12 months and 360 days. This month is known from the earliest records, being both referred to directly and alluded to<sup>14</sup>

It is the regular month of the Brāhmaṇas,<sup>15</sup> and must be regarded as the month which the Vedic Indian recognized. No other month is mentioned as such in the Brāhmaṇa literature; it is only in the Sūtras that months of different length occur. The Sāmaveda Sūtras<sup>16</sup> refer to (1) years with 324 days—i.e., periodic years with 12 months of 27 days each; (2) years with 351 days—i.e., periodic years with 12 months of 27 days each, plus another month of 27 days; (3) years with 354 days—i.e., 6 months of 30 days, and 6 with 29 days, in other words, lunar synodic years; (4) years with 360 days, or ordinary civil (sāvāna) years; (5) years with 378 days, which, as Thibaut<sup>17</sup> clearly shows, are third years, in which, after two years of 360 days each, 18 days were added to bring about correspondence between the civil year and the solar year of 366 days. But even the Sāmasūtras do not mention the year of 366 days, which is first known to the Jyotiṣa<sup>18</sup> and to Garga.<sup>19</sup>

That the Vedic period was acquainted with the year of 354 days cannot be affirmed with certainty. Zimmer,<sup>20</sup> indeed, thinks that it is proved by the fact that pregnancy is estimated at ten months, or sometimes a year.<sup>21</sup> But Weber<sup>22</sup> may be right in holding that the month is the periodic month of 27 days, for the period is otherwise too long if a year is taken. On the other hand, the period of ten months quite well suits the period of gestation, if birth takes place in the tenth month, so that in this sense the month of 30 days may well be meant.

The year of 12 months of 30 days each being admittedly quite unscientific, Zimmer<sup>23</sup> is strongly of opinion that it was only used with a recognition of the fact that intercalation took place, and that the year formed part of a greater complex, normally the five year Yuga or cycle. This system is well known from the Jyotiṣa : it consists of 62 months of  $29\frac{1}{51}$  days each = 1,830 days (two of these months being intercalary, one in the middle and one at the end), or 61 months of 30 days, or 60 months of  $30\frac{1}{2}$  days, the unit being clearly a solar year of 366 days. It is not an ideal system, since the year is too long;<sup>24</sup> but it is one which cannot be claimed even for the Brāhmaṇa period, during which no decision as to the true length of the year seems to have been arrived at. The references to it seen by Zimmer in the Rigveda<sup>25</sup> are not even reasonably plausible, while the pañcaka yuga, cited by him from the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa,<sup>26</sup> occurs only in a quotation in a commentary, and has no authority for the text itself.

On the other hand, there was undoubtedly some attempt to bring the year of 360 days—a synodic lunar year—roughly into connexion with reality. A Sāmasūtra<sup>27</sup> treats it as a solar year, stating that the sun perambulates each Naxatra in  $13\frac{1}{3}$  days, while others again evidently interpolated 18 days every third year, in order to arrive at some equality. But Vedic literature, from the Rigveda<sup>28</sup> downwards,<sup>29</sup> teems with the assertion of the difficulty of ascertaining the month. The length is variously given as 30 days,<sup>30</sup> 35 days,<sup>31</sup> or

<sup>24</sup> The Yuga is too long by nearly four days. The true year has 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 46 seconds. Cf. Thibaut, op. cit., 24, 25.

<sup>25</sup> i. 164, 14; iii. 55, 18. These passages are, of course, obscure, but to interpret them as referring to the ten half years of the Yuga is particularly gratuitous.

<sup>26</sup> xvii. 13, 17. See also Thibaut, op. cit., 7, 8; Weber, Indische Streifen, 1, 91, and references. The most that can be said is that a tendency to accept five years as a convenient period for intercalation was arising, which ultimately appears developed in the Jyotiṣa. But we cannot say that a year of 366 days is known until then.

<sup>27</sup> Lāṭyāyana Śrauta Sūtra, iv. 8, has nothing of this, but Nidāna Sūtra, v. 12, 2, 5, is quite clear.

36 days.<sup>32</sup> The last number possibly indicates an intercalation after six years ( $6 \times 6 = 36$ , or for ritual purposes 35), but for this we have no special evidence. There are many references<sup>33</sup> to the year having 12 or 13 months.

The names of the months are, curiously enough, not at all ancient. The sacrificial texts of the Yajurveda give them in their clearest form where the Agnicayana, 'building of the fire-altar,' is described.<sup>34</sup> These names are the following: (1) Madhu, (2) Mādhava (spring months, vāsantikāv ṛtū); (3) Śukra, (4) Śuci (summer months, graiṣmāv ṛtū); (5) Nabha (or Nabhas),<sup>35</sup> (6) Nabhasya (rainy months, vārṣikāv ṛtū); (7) Iṣa, (8) Ūrja (autumn months, sāradāv ṛtū); (9) Saha (or Sahas),<sup>35</sup> (10) Sahasya (winter months, haimantikāv ṛtū); (11) Tapa (or Tapas),<sup>35</sup> (12) Tapasya (cool months, śaiśirāv ṛtū).

There are similar lists in the descriptions of the Soma sacrifice<sup>36</sup> and of the horse sacrifice,<sup>37</sup> all of them agreeing in essentials. There are other lists of still more fanciful names,<sup>38</sup> but these have no claim at all to represent actual divisions in popular use. It is doubtful if the list given above is more than a matter of priestly invention. Weber points out that Madhu and Mādhava later appear as names of spring, and that these two are mentioned in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka<sup>39</sup> as if actually employed; but the evidence is very inadequate to show that the other names of the months given in the list were in ordinary use.<sup>40</sup>

In some of these lists the intercalary month is mentioned. The name given to it in the Vājasaneyi Samhitā<sup>41</sup> is Amhasaspati, while that given in the Taittirīya<sup>42</sup> and Maitrāyaṇi Samhitās<sup>43</sup> is Samsarpa. The Kāthaka Samhitā<sup>44</sup> gives it the name of Malimluca, which also occurs elsewhere, along with Samsarpa, in one of the lists of fanciful names.<sup>45</sup> The Atharvaveda<sup>46</sup> describes it as sanisrasa, 'slipping,' owing no doubt to its unstable condition.

The other method of naming the months is from the Nakṣatras. It is only beginning to be used in the Brāhmaṇas, but is found regularly in the Epic and later. The Jyotiṣa<sup>47</sup> mentions that Māgha and Tapa were identical: this is the fair interpretation of the passage, which also involves the identification of Madhu with Caitra, a result corresponding with the view frequently found in the Brāhmaṇas, that the full moon in Citrā, and not that in Phalgunī, is the beginning of the year.<sup>48</sup>

In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>49</sup> are found two curious expressions, yava and ayava, for the light and dark halves of the month, which is clearly considered to begin with the light half. Possibly the words are derived, as Egging<sup>50</sup> thinks, from yu, 'ward off,' with reference to evil spirits. The word Parvan

became virtually the last month of the preceding season. The truth is that the six seasons are an arbitrary division of the year, and that either Phālguna or Caitra could be regarded as the beginning of spring without much impropriety. Māhā-camasya, ‘descendant of Mahācamasa,’ is the patronymic of a teacher to whom the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka<sup>1</sup> ascribes the addition of Mahas to the triad Bhūr Bhuvas Svar.<sup>2</sup>

Māhā-rajana, ‘dyed with saffron’ (mahā-rajana), is applied to a garment (Vāsas) in the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (ii. 3, 10).

Māhā-rājya, 'the dignity of a great king' (mahā-rāja), is mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (viii. 6, 5; 12, 4; 15, 3).

Māhitthi, 'descendant of Mahittha,' is the patronymic of a teacher mentioned several times in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>1</sup> He is said to be a pupil of Vāmakakṣāyaṇa in the Bṛhad-āraṇyaka Upaniṣad.<sup>2</sup>

Māhina occurs in one passage of the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> which celebrates Asamāti as a king. The word, used in the plural, may be a patronymic referring to the priests who praised Asamāti, or it may be an adjective of uncertain meaning.

<sup>2</sup> Masculine: Av. v. 19, 15; xi. 9, 2; Kāthaka Saṃhitā, xxvii. 4; Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, x. 80. Neuter: Taittirīya Saṃhitā, vi. 4, 8, 1; Taittirīya Brāh-

Mitrātithi is mentioned in one hymn of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> as the father of Kuruśravaṇa and the grandfather of Upamaśravas, all being evidently kings.

1. Muñja denotes a grass, the Saccharum Muñja, which is of luxuriant growth, attaining to a height of ten feet. It is mentioned in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> along with other kinds of grasses as the lurking-place of venomous creatures. In the same text<sup>2</sup> the Muñja grass is spoken of as purifying, apparently being used as the material of a filter for Soma. The grass is often mentioned in the later Saṃhitās<sup>3</sup> and the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>4</sup> It is in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>5</sup> said to be 'hollow' (suṣira) and to be used for the plaited part of the throne (Āsandi).<sup>6</sup>

'son of Odana' (so St. Petersburg Dictionary, s.v.).

Cf. Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 240.

Mudgala and Mudgalānī, 'Mudgala's wife,' both figure in a hopelessly obscure hymn of the Rīgveda,<sup>1</sup> variously interpreted by Pischel<sup>2</sup> and Geldner<sup>3</sup> and von Bradke<sup>4</sup> as telling of a real chariot race in which, despite difficulties, Mudgala won by his wife's aid. The Indian tradition is as variant as the interpretations of modern authorities. Ṣaḍguruśiṣya<sup>5</sup> explains that Mudgala's oxen were stolen, that he pursued the thieves with the one old ox he had left, and that hurling his hammer (dru-ghaṇa) he caught the marauders. Yāska,<sup>6</sup> on the other hand, says that Mudgala won a race with a dru-ghaṇa and an ox instead of with two oxen. It is pretty clear that, as Roth<sup>7</sup> observed, the tradition is merely a guess, and a bad one, at the meaning of an obscure hymn, and this view is accepted by Oldenberg.<sup>8</sup> Bloomfield<sup>9</sup> has interpreted the legend as one of heavenly, not of human, events. Mudgala, probably a variant form of Mudgara,<sup>10</sup> which in the later language means a hammer or a similar weapon, may be meant as a personification of the thunderbolt of Indra, rather than a real man.<sup>11</sup> Later<sup>12</sup> Mudgala is a mythical sage.

may be connected with Mudga, 'bean.' See Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 240.

Muni occurs in one hymn of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> where it seems to denote an ascetic of magic powers with divine afflatus (deveṣita), the precursor of the strange ascetics of later India. This agrees with the fact that Aitaśa, the Muni, is in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>2</sup> regarded by his son as deranged, a view not unjustified if the nonsense which passes as the Aitaśapralāpa,<sup>3</sup> 'Chatter of Aitaśa,' was really his. The Rigveda<sup>4</sup> calls Indra the 'friend of Munis,' and the Atharvaveda<sup>5</sup> refers to a 'divine Muni' (deva muni), by whom a similar ascetic may be meant.

In the Upaniṣads<sup>6</sup> the Muni is of a more restrained type: he is one who learns the nature of the Brahman, the Absolute, by study, or sacrifice, or penance, or fasting, or faith (śraddhā). It must not of course be thought that there is any absolute distinction between the older Muni and the later: in both cases the man is in a peculiar ecstatic condition, but the ideal of the Upaniṣads is less material than the earlier picture of the Muni, who is more of a 'medicine man' than a sage. Nor would it be wise to conclude from the comparative rareness of the mention of the Muni in the Vedic texts that he was an infrequent figure in Vedic times: he was probably not approved by the priests who followed the ritual, and whose views were essentially different from the ideals of a Muni, which were superior to earthly considerations, such as the desire for children and Dakṣiṇās.<sup>7</sup>

The Indian commentators<sup>5</sup> agree with Yāska in taking Mūjavant as the name of a mountain, and though Hillebrandt<sup>6</sup> is justified in saying that the identification of Mūjavant by Zimmer<sup>7</sup> with one of the lower hills on the south-west of Kaśmīr lacks evidence, it is not reasonable to deny that Mūjavant was a hill from which the people took their name. Yāska<sup>8</sup> suggests that Mūjavant is equivalent to Muñjavant, which actually occurs later, in the Epic,<sup>9</sup> as the name of a mountain in the Himālaya.

1. Mṛga has the generic sense of 'wild beast' in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later.<sup>2</sup> Sometimes it is qualified by the epithet 'terrible' (bhṛma),<sup>3</sup> which indicates that a savage wild beast is meant. 2. Mṛga in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> denotes, according to Sāyaṇa's commentary, the constellation Mṛgaśīras. But it seems more probable<sup>2</sup> that Mṛga there really covers the whole of Orion, not merely the inconspicuous group of stars in the head of Orion that make up the Nakṣatra Mṛgaśīras, but also the star  $\alpha$  in his shoulder, which is reckoned as Ārdrā, and  $\gamma$  in his left shoulder. Tilak,<sup>3</sup> however, makes Mṛga or Mṛgaśīras into a different group, consisting of the belt of Orion, with two stars in the knees and one in the left shoulder, which he deems to resemble a deer's head with an arrow through it, an implausible and unlikely theory. <sup>2</sup> St. Petersburg Dictionary, s.v.; Nirukta, Erläuterungen, 79.

is a proof of the newness of the elephant to the Vedic Indians.<sup>3</sup> Later the adjective Hastin alone became the regular name of the animal (like Mahiṣa of the 'buffalo'). The elephant is also denoted in the Rigveda by the descriptive term Mrga Vāraṇa,<sup>4</sup> the 'wild or dangerous animal,' the adjective vāraṇa similarly becoming one of the names for 'elephant' in the later language. Pischel's view<sup>5</sup> that the catching of elephants by the use of tame female elephants is already alluded to in the Rigveda<sup>6</sup> seems very doubtful. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>7</sup> elephants are described as 'black, white-toothed, adorned with gold.'

<sup>3</sup> Pischel, Vedische Studien, i, 99, 100, combats the view that the elephant was new to the Vedic Indian, because of the similar use of mrga mahiṣa and mrga sūkara (Av. xii. i, 48) to denote the 'buffalo' and the 'boar' respectively. But Mahiṣa seems rather to bear out Roth's conclusion; while Sākara appears alone in the Rigveda, and mrga sūkara, 'wild hog,' seems to be used in one passage of the Av.

(xii. i, 48) to distinguish it from Varāha, 'boar,' in the same verse.

the Kaivarta or Kevarta, Pauñjiṣṭha, Dāśa, Maināla, 'fisherman,' and perhaps the Bainda and the Ānda,<sup>5</sup> who seem to have been some sort of fishermen.

It is not probable that even in the earliest Vedic period hunting formed the main source of livelihood for any of the Vedic tribes: pastoral pursuits and agriculture (Kṛṣi) were, no doubt, the mainstay of their existence. But it would be unreasonable to suppose that not much hunting was done, both for recreation and for purposes of food, as well as for protection of flocks from wild beasts. The R̥gveda is naturally our chief source of information in regard to hunting. The arrow was sometimes employed,<sup>6</sup> but, as is usual with primitive man, the normal instruments of capture were nets and pitfalls. Birds were regularly caught in nets (Pāśa,<sup>7</sup> Nidhā,<sup>8</sup> Jāla<sup>9</sup>), the bird-catcher being called nidhā-pati,<sup>10</sup> 'master of snares.' The net was fastened on pegs<sup>11</sup> (as is done with modern nets for catching birds). Another name of net is apparently Muṣṣijā.

Pits were used for catching antelopes (R̥śya), and so were called r̥śya-da,<sup>12</sup> 'antelope-catching.' Elephants were captured as in Greek times, perhaps through the instrumentality of tame females (see Mr̥ga Hastin). Apparently the boar was captured in the chase, dogs being used,<sup>13</sup> but the passage from which this view is deduced is of uncertain mythological content. There is also an obscure reference<sup>14</sup> to the capture of the buffalo (Gaura), but it is not clear whether the reference is to shooting with an arrow or capturing by means of ropes, perhaps a lasso, or a net. The lion was captured in pitfalls,<sup>15</sup> or was surrounded by the hunters and slain;<sup>16</sup> one very obscure passage refers to the lion being caught by ambushade, which perhaps merely alludes to the use of the hidden pit.<sup>17</sup>

The modes of catching fish are little known, for the only evidence available are the explanations of the various names

The modes of disposing of the dead were burial and cremation (see Agnidagdha). Both existed in the early Vedic period,<sup>11</sup> as in Greece;<sup>12</sup> but the former method was on the whole less favoured, and tended to be regarded with disapproval. The bones of the dead, whether burned or not, were marked by the erection of a tumulus (Śmaśāna): the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>13</sup> preserves traces of strong differences of opinion as to the mode in which these tumuli should be constructed. There is little or no trace<sup>14</sup> of the custom common in northern lands of sending the dead man to sea in a burning ship: the reference to a ship<sup>15</sup> seems to point to mythical perils after death, not to the mode of burial.

The life after death was to the Vedic Indian a repetition of the life in this world. He passed into the next world sarva-tanuḥ sāṅgaḥ, 'with whole body and all his members,'<sup>16</sup> enjoying there the same pleasures as he had enjoyed on earth. Even in the Rigveda<sup>17</sup> there are hints of evil awaiting evil-doers, but it is not until the Atharvaveda<sup>18</sup> and the Brāhmaṇas<sup>19</sup> that a hell of punishment is set out, and it is in the Brāhmaṇas<sup>20</sup> that good and evil deeds are said to produce happiness or hell hereafter. But there is no hint of extinction<sup>21</sup> in the Rigveda as the fate of the wicked, as Roth<sup>22</sup> inclined to think. The Vedic poet not being deeply moral, his verses do not convey, as would those of a man convinced of sin, warnings of future judgment.

Brāhmaṇa<sup>4</sup> it appears in the form of Methī to denote the post to which the sacrificial cow is tied. The word is very variously spelt, Medhi and Meṭhī also being found.

<sup>4</sup> xiii. 9, 17. Cf. Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa, i. 19, 1 (Journal of the American Oriental Society, 23, 329).

Medha is a word of uncertain sense occurring in a Vālakhilya hymn of the Rigveda.<sup>1</sup> According to the St. Petersburg Dictionary, the proper name of a sacrificer may be meant.

<sup>1</sup> viii. 50, 10 (cf. viii. 49, 10), where, as a rule, the sense of 'sacrifice' is accepted as adequate.

Medhātithi,<sup>1</sup> Medhyātithi<sup>2</sup> ('having a guest at the sacrifice') appear to be the names of one and the same man, a descendant of Kaṇva and a famous Vedic Ṛṣi, to whom the authorship of various hymns<sup>3</sup> is attributed in the Anukramaṇi (Index). To him Indra is said in the Rigveda<sup>4</sup> to have come in the form of a ram: this myth is perpetuated in the Subrahmaṇyā formula<sup>5</sup> recited by the priest while the Soma is being carried within the sacrificial enclosure, when Indra is hailed as 'ram of Medhātithi.' He appears also as a rival of Vatsa, whom he accused of low birth, but who convinced him of his error by undergoing a fire ordeal (cf. Divya).<sup>6</sup> In the Atharvaveda<sup>7</sup> he is mentioned with many other sages, and occurs elsewhere<sup>8</sup> also as a sage.

<sup>3</sup> i. 12-23; viii. 1-3; 22, 23; ix. 41-43. In the ascriptions Medhātithi and Medhyātithi are confused.

legend is alluded to in the Śāṭyāyanaka. See Sāyana on Rv. i. 51, 1; viii. 2, 40, and Oertel, Journal of the American Oriental Society, 16, ccxl. On the explanation of the legend, cf. Weber, Indische Studien, 9, 38 et seq.

Mleccha occurs in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> in the sense of a barbarian in speech. The Brahmin is there forbidden to use barbarian speech. Yakṣa is found several times in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and the Atharvaveda<sup>2</sup> in passages in which Ludwig<sup>3</sup> sees the meaning of a feast or holy practice in accordance with the native commentators. It is, however, very doubtful whether this sense ever occurs.<sup>4</sup>

Yakṣu is mentioned, once in the singular and once in the plural, in the hymn of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> which celebrates Sudās' battle with the ten kings. Who they were and what part they played in that conflict is quite uncertain. They seem, from the wording of the text, to have taken part in two conflicts, as Zimmer<sup>2</sup> says—one on the Paruṣṇī (Ravi), and one on the Yamunā (Jumna)—with the aid of the Ajas and Śigrus, under the leadership of Bheda. It is, however, at least possible that in the former passage Yadu should be read for Yakṣu, or, at any rate, Yakṣu be deemed a contemptuous substitute of the name of a possibly un-Āryan or unimportant tribe (as their allies, the Ajas and Śigrus, clearly were) for the name of the certainly famous Yadus, as is suggested by Hopkins.<sup>3</sup> Cf. Turvaśa.

however, whether Hopkins thinks that the Yadus are alluded to, but it seems probable.

Yakṣma in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and the Atharvaveda<sup>2</sup> frequently denotes 'illness,' in general, perhaps as rendering the body emaciated. A hundred kinds of Yakṣma are referred to in the Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā,<sup>3</sup> and a-yakṣma in the Kāthaka Saṃhitā,<sup>4</sup> denotes 'free from disease.' In the Yajurveda Saṃhitās<sup>5</sup> an account is given of the origin of Yakṣma, which is distinguished as of three kinds—Rāja-yakṣma, 'royal Yakṣma,' Pāpa-yakṣma, 'evil Yakṣma,' and Jāyanya, most probably 'syphilis.' The second of the series is elsewhere unknown, and can hardly be defined, for it merely means 'serious or deadly disease.' Cf. also Ajñātayakṣma.

<sup>1</sup> Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 12, 9, 1; Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, v. 32, 1; Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. 5, 8, 3; xii. 3, 4, 9.

<sup>2</sup> Aitareya Āraṇyaka, iii. 2, 3, 5; Sāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka, viii. 3, 8; Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad, i. 5, 5; ii. 4, 10; iv. 1, 2; 5, 11; Chāndogya Upaniṣad, i. 3, 7; iii. 2, 1, 2; 15, 7; vii. 1, 2, 4; 2, 1; 7, 1; Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra, x. 7, 2; Sāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra, xvi. 2, 6, etc.

Yajus is repeatedly distinguished from the Ṛc and the Sāman in Vedic literature.<sup>1</sup> The Yajus is the utterance accompanying the sacrifice, and may have the form of verse or prose, the term covering both.

<sup>1</sup> Rv. x. 90, 9; Av. v. 26, 1; ix. 6, 2; Taittirīya Saṃhitā, v. 5, 3, 1; 9, 4; Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā, i. 30; iv. 1; xix. 28; Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, i. 29, 21; viii. 13, 2; Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 2, 1, 7; vi. 5, 1, 2; 3, 4, etc. In the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad, vi. 4, 33, there is a reference to the śuklāni Yajūṃṣi, 'white or pure Yajus,' as promulgated by Vājasaneyi Yājñavalkya, whence the Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā is popularly known as the 'White Yajurveda.' The theory that this is due to the fact that in the Vājasaneyi the Mantra parts of the text are not accompanied by Brāhmaṇa passages is, though accepted by Weber, Indian Literature, 103, 104; Eggeling, Sacred Books of the East, 12, xxvii, and others, now to be abandoned. In the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, v. 10, the expression śukra-yajūṃṣi seems to refer to books iv. and v. of that text. Cf. also Winternitz, Geschichte der indischen Literatur, 1, 149, n.

Yajña-gāthā denotes a verse (Gāthā) containing a maxim as to the sacrifice of any kind or sort,<sup>1</sup> or, as it is expressed in the Mahābhārata,<sup>2</sup> a 'verse sung regarding the sacrifice' (gāthā yajña-gītā).

Yajña-vacas Rājastambāyana, 'descendant of Rājastamba,' is the name of a teacher, a pupil of Tura Kāvaseya, according to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>1</sup> He is also mentioned in the Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā.<sup>2</sup>

Yajña-sena is the name of a teacher with the patronymic Caitra or Caitriyāyana mentioned in the Yajurveda Saṃhitās.<sup>1</sup>

Yajñeṣu is the name of a man in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa.<sup>1</sup> He was made to prosper by his priest Mātsya, who knew the exact moment of sacrificing.

Yajñopavīta denotes the 'wearing of the Brahminical thread over the left shoulder at the sacrifice,' and is mentioned as early as the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa.<sup>1</sup> Tilak,<sup>2</sup> however, urges that it was not originally a thread that was worn, but a garment of cloth (Vāsas) or of deerskin (Ajina). This seems quite probable.

vistara, iii. 4, 1. This view is not prejudiced by the quite implausible conjectures as to Orion's belt with which it is combined. Cf. Eggeling, Sacred Books of the East, 12, 361, 424.

Yati is the name of an ancient clan which is connected with the Bhrgus in two passages of the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> where the Yatis certainly seem to be real persons. In another hymn,<sup>2</sup> however, they already appear as almost mythical. In the Yajurveda Samhitās,<sup>3</sup> and elsewhere,<sup>4</sup> the Yatis are a race whom Indra, in an evil moment, gave over to the hyēnas (Sālāvṛka): exactly what is referred to is uncertain. Yati is mentioned with Bhrgu in a verse of the Sāmaveda.<sup>4</sup>

Yadu is the name of a tribe and of the king of the tribe. They are mentioned repeatedly in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> normally in conjunction with Turvaśa. They seem to have taken part in the great battle against Sudās:<sup>2</sup> the Yadu and the Turvaśa kings seem to have escaped with their lives, while the Anu and the Druhyu kings perished. This is at least the most natural explanation of several passages,<sup>3</sup> though these passages possibly refer to a successful raid across the Sarayu, and a defeat of two princes, Arṇa and Citraratha.<sup>4</sup> That Turvaśa was the Yadu king, as Hopkins<sup>5</sup> holds, is most improbable.

<sup>1</sup> i. 36, 18; 54, 6; 174, 9; iv. 30, 17; v. 31, 8; vi. 45, 1; viii. 4, 7; 7, 18; 9, 14; 10, 5; 45, 27; ix. 61, 2; x. 49, 8; plural, i. 108, 8. See Turvaśa, and Hopkins, Journal of the American Oriental Society, 15, 258 et seq.

Yamunā, 'twin,' the name of a river, so called as running parallel with the Ganges, is mentioned thrice in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> and not rarely later. According to the Rigveda,<sup>2</sup> the Trtsus and Sudās won a great victory against their foes on the Yamunā; there is no reason<sup>3</sup> whatever to accept Hopkins'<sup>4</sup> view that the Yamunā here was another name of the Paruṣṇī (Ravi). In the Atharvaveda<sup>5</sup> the salve (Āñjana) of the Yamunā (Yāmuna) is mentioned along with that of Trikakud (Traikakuda) as of value. In the Aitareya<sup>6</sup> and the Śatapatha<sup>7</sup> Brāhmaṇas the Bharatas are famed as victorious on the Yamunā. Other Brāhmaṇas<sup>8</sup>

Yayāti is mentioned twice in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> once as an ancient sacrificer, and once as Nahuṣya, 'descendant of Nahuṣa,' apparently a king. There is no trace whatever of his connexion with Pūru, as in the Epic,<sup>2</sup> the tradition of which must be deemed to be inaccurate.

1. Yava in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> appears to be a generic term for any sort of 'grain,' and not merely 'barley.' The latter sense is probably found in the Atharvaveda,<sup>2</sup> and is regular later. The barley harvest came after spring,<sup>3</sup> in the summer.<sup>4</sup> That barley was cultivated in the period of the Rigveda<sup>5</sup> is not certain, but on the whole very probable.<sup>6</sup>

Yaśasvin Jayanta Lauhitya ('descendant of Lohita') is the name of a teacher, a pupil of Kṛṣṇarāta Triveda Lauhitya in the Vaṃśa (list of teachers) in the Jaiminiya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa (iii. 42, 1).

Yājña-valkya, 'descendant of Yajñavalkya,' is repeatedly mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> as an authority on questions of ritual. He is, however, also given as an authority on questions of philosophy in the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad,<sup>2</sup> but Oldenberg<sup>3</sup> is, no doubt, right in thinking that no possible importance can be attached to the mention of Yājñavalkya in the latter capacity. He is said to have been a pupil of Uddālaka Āruṇi,<sup>4</sup> whom he opposed successfully in a dispute.<sup>5</sup> His two wives, Maitreyī and Kātyāyanī, are mentioned in the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad,<sup>6</sup> which concludes<sup>7</sup> with a passage ascribing to Yājñavalkya Vājasaneyā the 'white Yajus' (śuklāṇi yajūṃṣi). It is remarkable that Yājñavalkya is never mentioned in any other Vedic text outside the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa except the Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka,<sup>8</sup> where, however, both references are merely transcripts from the Śatapatha.<sup>9</sup> It has

2. Yuga in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> frequently denotes a 'generation'; but the expression daśame yuge applied to Dīrghatamas in one passage<sup>2</sup> must mean 'tenth decade' of life.

There is no reference in the older Vedic texts to the five-year cycle (see Samvatsara). The quotation from the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>3</sup> given in the St. Petersburg Dictionary, and by Zimmer<sup>4</sup> and others, is merely a citation from a modern text in the commentary on that work.

Nor do the older Vedic texts know of any series of Yugas or ages such as are usual later. In the Atharvaveda<sup>5</sup> there are mentioned in order a hundred years, an ayuta (10,000?), and then two, three, or four Yugas: the inference from this seems to be that a Yuga means more than an ayuta, but is not very certain. Zimmer<sup>6</sup> adduces a passage from the Rigveda,<sup>7</sup> but the reference there, whatever it may be,<sup>8</sup> is certainly not to the four ages (cf. also Triyuga).<sup>9</sup> The Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa<sup>10</sup> recognizes long periods of time—e.g., one of 100,000 years.

See Muir, Sanskrit Texts, 1<sup>2</sup>, 45, 46.

To the four ages, Kali, Dvāpara, Tretā, and Kṛta, there is no certain reference in Vedic literature, though the names occur as the designations of throws at dice (see Akṣa). In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>11</sup> the names occur, but it is not clear that the ages are really meant. Haug<sup>12</sup> thought that the dice were meant: this view is at least as probable as the alternative explanation, which is accepted by Weber,<sup>13</sup> Roth,<sup>14</sup> Wilson,<sup>15</sup> Max Müller,<sup>16</sup> and Muir.<sup>17</sup> Roth, indeed, believes that the verse is an interpolation; but in any case it must be remembered that the passage is from a late book of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa. Four ages—Puṣya, Dvāpara, Khārvā, and Kṛta—are mentioned in the late Śaḍviṃśa Brāhmaṇa,<sup>18</sup> and the Dvāpara in the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>19</sup>

A quite different theory of the Yugas is given by Shamasastri, Gavām Ayana, 141 et seq., but his whole theory is quite impossible. Weber once (Indian Literature, 113, n. 127) found the mention of the quinquennial Yuga in Rv. iii. 55, 18, but that passage refers to the five or six seasons (see Griffith, Hymns of the Rigveda, 1, 382, n.), while i. 25, 8, merely alludes to the intercalary month. Weber also (op. cit., 70, 247) considers that the Yugas are derived from the phases of the moon, but this idea was long since disposed of by Roth, Die Lehre von den vier Weltaltern (Tübingen, 1860).

Raṇa denotes properly the 'joy' of battle, then 'battle,' 'combat' itself in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> i. 61, 1, 9; 74, 3; 119, 3; vi. 16, 15, etc. | <sup>2</sup> Av. v. 2, 4, etc.

Ratnin, 'receiving gifts,' is the term applied to those people of the royal entourage in whose houses the Ratna-havis, a special rite, was performed in the course of the Rājasūya or 'royal consecration.' The list given in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā<sup>1</sup> and the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa<sup>2</sup> consists of the Brahman (i.e., the Purohita), the Rājanya, the Mahiṣī (the first wife of the king), the Vāvāta (the favourite wife of the king), the Parivrkti (the discarded wife), the Senānī, 'commander of the army'; the Sūta, 'charioteer'; the Grāmaṇī, 'village headman'; the Kṣattr, 'chamberlain'; the Saṃgrahītr, 'charioteer' or 'treasurer'; the Bhāgadugha, 'collector of taxes' or 'divider of food'; and the Akṣāvāpa, 'superintendent of dicing' or 'thrower of dice.' In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>3</sup> the order is Senānī; Purohita; Mahiṣī; Sūta; Grāmaṇī; Kṣattr; Saṃgrahītr; Bhāgadugha; Akṣāvāpa; Go-nikartana, 'slayer of cows' or 'hunter'; and Pālāgala, 'courier'; the 'discarded wife' being mentioned as forbidden to stay at home<sup>4</sup> on the day of the ceremony of offering a pap for Nirṛti in her house. In the Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā<sup>5</sup> the list is Brahman (i.e., Purohita); Rājan; Mahiṣī; Parivrkti; Senānī; Saṃgrahītr; Kṣattr; Sūta; Vaiśyagrāmaṇī; Bhāgadugha; Takṣa-Rathakārau, 'carpenter and chariot-maker'; Akṣāvāpa; and Go-vikarta. The Kāthaka Saṃhitā<sup>6</sup> substitutes Go-vyacha for Govikarta, and omits Takṣa-Rathakārau.

It will be seen that the list is essentially that of the royal household, and of the king's servants in the administration of the country, though the exact sense of Saṃgrahītr, Bhāgadugha, Sūta, Grāmaṇī, Kṣattr, is open to reasonable doubt, mainly as to whether public officers or private servants<sup>7</sup> are meant, for the names are of uncertain significance. A briefer list of eight Vīras, 'heroes,' as among the friends of the king,

man who dices for the king—i.e., a professional dicer who plays with the king or watches his play—or a public officer who superintends the gambling halls of the state and collects the revenue, as was regularly done later on. Early English history shows similar evolution of household officers into ministers of state.

is given in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa :<sup>8</sup> brother, son, Purohita, Mahiṣī, Sūta, Grāmaṇī, Kṣattrī, and Saṃgrahītrī.

Ratha in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later<sup>2</sup> denotes 'chariot' as opposed to Anas, 'cart,' though the distinction is not absolute. Of differences in the structure of the two we have no information, except that the Kha, or nave hole, in the wheel of the chariot was greater than in that of the cart.<sup>3</sup>

The chariot has, as a rule, two wheels (Cakra), to which reference is frequently made.<sup>4</sup> The wheel consisted of a rim (Pavi), a felly (Pradhi), spokes (Ara),<sup>5</sup> and a nave (Nabhya). The rim and the felly together constitute the Nemi. The hole in the nave is called Kha : into it the end of the axle was inserted ; but there is some uncertainty whether Āṇi denotes the extremity of the axle that was inserted in the nave, or the lynch-pin used to keep that extremity in the wheel. Sometimes a solid wheel was used.<sup>6</sup>

The axle (Akṣa) was, in some cases, made of Araṭu wood ;<sup>7</sup> round its ends the wheels revolved. To the axle was attached the body of the chariot (Kośa). This part is also denoted by the word Vandhura, which more precisely means the 'seat' of the chariot. The epithet tri-vandhura is used of the chariot of the Aśvins, seemingly to correspond with another of its epithets, tri-cakra : perhaps, as Weber<sup>8</sup> thinks, a chariot with three seats and three wheels was a real form of vehicle ; but Zimmer<sup>9</sup> considers that the vehicle was purely mythical. Garta also denotes the seat of the warrior.

At right angles to the axle was the pole of the chariot (Īṣā, Praūga). Normally there was, it seems, one pole, on either side of which the horses were harnessed, a yoke (Yuga) being laid across their necks; the pole was passed through the hole in the yoke (called Kha<sup>10</sup> or Tardman<sup>11</sup>), the yoke and the pole then being tied together.<sup>12</sup>

The horses were tied by the neck (grīvā), where the yoke was placed, and also at the shoulder, presumably by traces fastened to a bar of wood at right angles to the pole, or fastened to the ends of the pole, if that is to be regarded, as it probably should, as of triangular shape, wide at the foot and coming to a point at the tip.<sup>13</sup> The traces seem to be denoted by Raśmi and Raśanā. These words also denote the 'reins,' which were fastened to the bit (perhaps śiprā) in the horse's mouth. The driver controlled the horses by reins, and urged them on with a whip (Kaśā).<sup>14</sup> The girths of the horse were called Kakṣyā.<sup>15</sup>

The normal number of horses seems to have been two, but three or four<sup>16</sup> were often used. It is uncertain whether, in these cases, the extra horse was attached in front or at the side; possibly both modes were in use. Even five steeds could be employed.<sup>17</sup> Horses were normally used for chariots, but the ass (gardabha)<sup>18</sup> or mule (aśvatari)<sup>19</sup> are also mentioned. The ox was employed for drawing carts, and in fact derived its <sup>10</sup> This seems to be the sense of Rv. viii. 91, 7; but it has also been taken as the opening in the yoke through which the ox's head passed (the Homeric ζεγάλη). See Cowell's note on Wilson's translation; Griffith, Hymns of the Rigveda, 2, 237, n.

<sup>13</sup> Zimmer, op. cit., 249, thinks that vāṇī in Rv. i. 119, 5, denotes the two bars of wood to which the traces were fastened. This is also the view of Roth, St. Petersburg Dictionary, s.v., Böhtlingk's Lexicon, and Grassmann. The word may mean 'two voices' (Griffith, Hymns of the Rigveda, 1, 162).

<sup>16</sup> Three horses are mentioned in Rv. x. 33, 5, and Praṣṭi in Rv. i. 39, 6; viii. 7, 28, etc., may have the sense of 'third horse.' name, Anadvāh, from this use. Sometimes a poor man had to be content with a single steed, which then ran between two shafts.<sup>20</sup>

In the chariot the driver stood on the right, while the warrior was on the left, as indicated by his name, Savyeṣṭha or Savyaṣṭhā.<sup>21</sup> He could also sit when he wanted, for the chariot had seats, and an archer would naturally prefer to sit while shooting his arrows.

The dimensions of the chariot are given in the Śulba Sūtra<sup>22</sup> of Āpastamba at 188 Angulis (finger-breadths) for the pole, 104 for the axle, and 86 for the yoke. The material used in its construction was wood, except for the rim of the wheel.<sup>23</sup>

Many other parts of the chariot are mentioned, their names being often obscure in meaning: see Anka, Nyanka, Uddhi, Pakṣas, Pātalya, Bhurij, Rathopastha, Rathavāhana.

<sup>21</sup> This is the case in Av. viii, 8, 23, with Savyaṣṭhā, and in the Taittiriya Saṃhitā, i, 7, 9, 1, savyeṣṭha-sārathī occurs as a compound where the sense is certainly 'the warrior and the charioteer.' Ratha-kāra, 'chariot-maker,' is mentioned in the Atharvaveda<sup>1</sup> as one of those who are to be subject to the king, seeming to stand generally as an example of the industrial population. He is also referred to in the Yajurveda Saṃhitā<sup>2</sup> and in the Brāhmaṇas:<sup>3</sup> in all these passages, as well as probably in the Atharvaveda also, the Rathakāra already forms a caste. later system<sup>4</sup> regards the Rathakāra as the offspring of a Māhiṣya (the son of a Kṣatriya husband and a Vaiśya wife) and a Karaṇī (the daughter of a Vaiśya husband and a Śūdra wife), but it is unreasonable to suppose that such an origin is historically accurate. The Rathakāras must rather be deemed to have been a functional caste. Hillebrandt<sup>5</sup> suggests that the Anu tribe formed the basis of the Rathakāra caste, referring to their worship of the Ṛbhus, who are, of course, the chariot-makers par excellence. But there is little ground for this view.

Ratha-gṛtsa in the Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā (xv. 15) and the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (iii. 48, 9) denotes a 'skilled charioteer.'<sup>1</sup>

xi. 8, 1, 11, etc.

Ratha-jūti in the Atharvaveda (xix. 44, 3) is either an adjective meaning 'driving swiftly in a chariot,'<sup>1</sup> or a proper name, as Roth in the St. Petersburg Dictionary suggests.

Ratha-prota Dārbhya ('descendant of Darbha') is mentioned in the Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā (ii. 1, 3) perhaps as a king, but possibly as a priest.

Ratha-proṣṭha occurs as the name of a princely family in the Rīgveda (x. 60, 5). See Subandhu.

Ratharvī is the name of a snake in the Atharvaveda (x. 4, 5).

Ratha-vāhana is the name in the Rīgveda<sup>1</sup> and later<sup>2</sup> for a movable stand to hold the chariot. According to Roth,<sup>3</sup> it corresponds to the Greek βωμός, on which the chariot rested when out of use. The word Rathavāhana-vāha is employed in the sense of the two horses that draw the stand.<sup>4</sup> Weber<sup>5</sup> thinks it was used to convey the war chariot to the scene of action.

Weber, however, admits that the Rathavāhana may at times have served as a mere stand, like the Homeric βωμός, while Geldner expresses the opinion that it never has that sense. The use of the term Rathavāhanavāha shows that the stand was movable.

Rathavīti Dārḥya ('descendant of Darbha') is mentioned once in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> as residing in places abounding in kine (gomatīr annu) far away among the hills, possibly the Himālayas, and as the patron of the singer of the hymn. Later the tradition<sup>2</sup> makes him the king, whose daughter Śyāsvāśva won for his wife by his father's and the Maruts' aid.

Ratha-śirṣa, the 'head of the chariot'—that is, its fore-part—is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (ix. 4. 1, 13).

Ratha-saṅga in the Rigveda (ix. 53, 2) denotes the hostile encounter of chariots.

Rathākṣa in the Yajurveda Saṃhitā<sup>1</sup> denotes the 'axle of the chariot.' Its length is given by the scholiast on the Kātyāyana Śrauta Sūtra<sup>2</sup> as 104 Aṅgulas ('finger-breadths'), which agrees with the statement in the Āpastamba Śulba Sūtra.<sup>3</sup> See Ratha.

Randhra seems, in the phrase Ukṣṇo Randhra occurring in one passage of the Rigveda (viii. 7, 26), to be the name of a place, but the sense is very doubtful. In the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa (xiii. 9, 13) Ukṣṇo randhra is the name of a man.

Rabhi, occurring once in the Rigveda (viii. 5, 29), designates some part of the chariot. The term perhaps means 'supporting shaft.'

Rambha seems to mean a 'staff' or 'support' in one passage of the Rigveda (viii. 45, 20). In another place (ii. 15, 9) a man is described as Rambhin, apparently as carrying a staff to support himself in old age; Sāyaṇa explains this word as 'door-keeper' (like one of the senses of daṇḍin, 'staff-bearer,' in later Sanskrit).

Rambhīṇī occurs in one passage of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> as being on the shoulders of the Maruts. A 'spear' seems to be meant, perhaps conceived as clinging (rambh=rabh, 'clasp') to the shoulders of a man.

Raśanā means generally 'cord' or 'rope.' In the Rigveda the word often refers to various fastenings of a horse. In one passage<sup>1</sup> the expression śiṛṣanyā raśanā, 'head rope,' perhaps means not so much 'reins' as 'headstall.' In others<sup>2</sup> the sense of 'traces' seems certain, though sometimes<sup>3</sup> 'reins' or 'traces' may equally well be intended. Elsewhere the more general sense of 'rope' for stening is meant.<sup>4</sup>

Rasā is found in three passages of the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> clearly as the name of a real stream in the extreme north-west of the Vedic territory. Elsewhere<sup>2</sup> it is the name of a mythic stream at the ends of the earth, which as well as the atmosphere it encompasses. It is reasonable to assume that, as in the case of the Sarasvatī, the literal is the older sense, and to see in the river a genuine stream, perhaps originally the Araxes or Jaxartes, because the Vendidad mentions the Rañhā, the Avestan form of Rasā. But the word seems originally to allude merely to the 'sap' or 'flavour' of the waters,<sup>3</sup> and so could be applied to every river, like Sarasvatī.

<sup>1</sup> i. 112, 12; v. 53, 9; x. 75, 6. In v. 53, 9, the phrase rasānitabhā is found. Ludwig, Translation of the Rigveda, 3, 202, is inclined to regard anitabhā as an epithet of Rasā, perhaps for amitabhā, 'of unmeasured splendour,' but this is hardly probable. It seems better to take Anitabhā as the name of an otherwise unknown river. Cf. Max Müller, India, 166, 173, n.

Rāja-kartr,<sup>1</sup> or Rāja-kṛt,<sup>2</sup> 'king-maker,' is the term applied in the Atharvaveda and the Brāhmaṇas to those who, 'not themselves kings,'<sup>3</sup> aid in the consecration of the king. In the Śatapatha<sup>2</sup> the persons meant and specified are the Sūta, 'charioteer,' and the Grāmaṇī, 'village chief,' probably a representative chief from the village nearest to the place of consecration, as Eggeling<sup>4</sup> suggests. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>1</sup> according to the commentator's explanation, the father, brother, etc., are meant; in the Atharvaveda,<sup>2</sup> also, the meaning of the expression is not stated in the text.

Rāja-kulā, a 'kingly family,' is mentioned in the Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa (iii. 28, 4), where, it is to be noted, such a family is ranked after, not before, a Brāhmaṇa Kula, a 'Brahmin family.'

1. Rājan, 'king,' is a term repeatedly occurring in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and the later literature.<sup>2</sup> It is quite clear that the normal, though not universal form of government, in early India was that by kings, as might be expected in view of the fact that the Āryan Indians were invaders in a hostile territory: a situation which, as in the case of the Āryan invaders of Greece and of the German invaders of England, resulted almost necessarily in strengthening the monarchic element of the constitution.<sup>3</sup> The mere patriarchal organization of society is not sufficient, as Zimmer<sup>4</sup> assumes, to explain the Vedic kingship.

Tenure of Monarchy.—Zimmer<sup>5</sup> is of opinion that while the Vedic monarchy was sometimes hereditary, as is indeed shown by several cases where the descent can be traced,<sup>6</sup> yet in others the monarchy was elective, though it is not clear whether the selection by the people was between the members of the royal family only or extended to members of all the noble clans. It must, however, be admitted that the evidence for the elective monarchy is not strong. As Geldner<sup>7</sup> argues, all the passages cited<sup>8</sup> can be regarded not as choice by the cantons (Viś), but as acceptance by the subjects (viś): this seems the more probable sense. Of course this is no proof that the monarchy was not sometimes elective: the practice of selecting one member of the family to the exclusion of another less well qualified is exemplified by the legend in Yāska<sup>9</sup> of the Kuru brothers, Devāpi and Śantanu, the value of which, as evidence of contemporary views, is not seriously affected by the legend itself being of dubious character and validity.

Royal power was clearly insecure: there are several references to kings being expelled from their realms, and their efforts to recover their sovereignty,<sup>10</sup> and the Atharvaveda contains spells in the interest of royalty.<sup>11</sup>

The King in War.—Naturally the Vedic texts, after the Rigveda, contain few notices of the warlike adventures that no doubt formed a very considerable proportion of the royal functions. But the Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa<sup>12</sup> contains the statement that the Kuru-Pañcāla kings, who, like the Brahmins of those tribes, stand as representatives of good form, used to make their raids in the dewy season. The word Udāja, too, with its variant Nirāja, records that kings took a share of the booty of war. The Rigveda<sup>13</sup> has many references to Vedic wars: it is clear that the Kṣatriyas were at least as intent on fulfilling their duty of war as the Brahmins on sacrificing and their other functions. Moreover, beside offensive war, defence was a chief duty of the king: he is emphatically the 'protector of the tribe' (gopā janasya), or, as is said in the Rājasūya ('royal consecration'), 'protector of the Brahmin.'<sup>14</sup> His Purohita was expected to use his spells and charms to secure the success of his king's arms. The king no doubt fought in person: so Pratardana met death in war according to the Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad,<sup>15</sup> and in the Rājasūya the king is invoked as 'sacker of cities' (purāṇ bhetā).

The King in Peace.—In return for his warlike services the king received the obedience<sup>16</sup>—sometimes forced<sup>17</sup>—of the people, and in particular their contributions for the maintenance of royalty. The king is regularly<sup>18</sup> regarded as 'devouring

It is to this form of taxation that the share of village (grāme), horses (aśveṣu), and kine (goṣu) of Av. iv. 22, 2, is to be referred. It is significant that the village and cattle are put on the same footing, as tending to refute the argument that the king was supreme landowner. See n. 31 below. For the rate of taxation, which later was one-sixth, cf. Hopkins, Journal of the American Oriental Society, 13, 85, 86; India, Old and New, 238 et seq.; 333; Mrs. Rhys Davids, Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, 1901, 860.

the people,' but this phrase must not be explained as meaning that he necessarily oppressed them. It obviously has its origin in a custom by which the king and his retinue were fed by the people's contributions, a plan with many parallels. It is also probable that the king could assign the royal right of maintenance to a Kṣatriya, thus developing a nobility supported by the people. Taxation would not normally fall on Kṣatriya or Brahmin; the texts contain emphatic assertions of the exemption of the goods of the latter from the royal bounty.<sup>19</sup> In the people, however, lay the strength of the king.<sup>20</sup> See also Bali.

In return the king performed the duties of judge. Himself immune from punishment (a-danḍya), he wields the rod of punishment (Danḍa).<sup>21</sup> It is probable that criminal justice remained largely in his actual administration, for the Sūtras<sup>22</sup> preserve clear traces of the personal exercise of royal criminal jurisdiction. Possibly the jurisdiction could be exercised by a royal officer, or even by a delegate, for a Rājanya is mentioned as an overseer (adhyakṣa) of the punishment of a Śūdra in the Kāthaka Saṃhitā.<sup>23</sup> In civil justice it may be that the king played a much less prominent part, save as a court of final appeal, but evidence is lacking on this head. The Madhyamaśī of the Rigveda was probably not a royal, but a private judge or arbitrator. A wide criminal jurisdiction is, however, to some extent supported<sup>24</sup> by the frequent mention of Varuṇa's spies, for Varuṇa is the divine counterpart of the human king.<sup>25</sup> Possibly such spies could be used in war also.<sup>26</sup> part of his duties.<sup>27</sup> Nor can we say exactly what executive functions devolved on the king.

In all his acts the king was regularly advised by his Purohita; he also had the advantage of the advice of the royal ministers and attendants (see Ratnin). The local administration was entrusted to the Grāmaṇī, or village chief, who may have been selected or appointed by the king. The outward signs of the king's rank were his palace<sup>28</sup> and his brilliant dress.<sup>29</sup>

The King as Landowner.—The position of the king with regard to the land is somewhat obscure. The Greek notices,<sup>30</sup> in which, unhappily, it would be dangerous to put much trust, since they were collected by observers who were probably little used to accurate investigations of such matters, and whose statements were based on inadequate information, vary in their statements. In part they speak of rent being paid, and declare that only the king and no private person could own land, while in part they refer to the taxation of land. Hopkins<sup>31</sup> is strongly of opinion that the payments made were paid for protection—i.e., in modern terminology as a tax, but that the king was recognized as the owner of all the land, while yet the individual or the joint family also owned the land. As against Baden-Powell,<sup>32</sup> who asserted that the idea of the king as a landowner was later, he urges for the Vedic period that the king, as we have seen, is described as devouring the people, and that, according to the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>33</sup> the Vaiśya can be devoured at will and maltreated (but, unlike the Śūdra, not killed); and for the period of the legal Sūtras and Śāstras he cites Brhaspati and Nārada as clearly recognizing the king's overlordship, besides a passage of the Mānava Dharma Śāstra<sup>34</sup> which describes the king as 'lord of all,' a phrase which Bühler<sup>35</sup> was inclined to interpret as a proof of landowning. The evidence is, however, inadequate to prove what is sought. It is not denied that gradually the king came to be vaguely conceived—as the English king still is—as lord of all the land in a proprietorial sense, but it is far more probable that such an idea was only a gradual development than that it was primitive. The power of devouring the people is a political power, not a right of ownership; precisely the same feature can be traced in South Africa,<sup>36</sup> where the chief can deprive a man arbitrarily of his land, though the land is really owned by the native. The matter is ultimately to some extent one of terminology, but the parallel cases are in favour of distinguishing between the political rights of the crown, which can be transferred by way of a grant, and the rights of ownership. Hopkins<sup>37</sup> thinks that the gifts of land to priests, which seems to be the first sign of land transactions in the Brāhmaṇas, was an actual gift of land; it may have been so in many cases, but it may easily also have been the grant of a superiority: the Epic grants are hardly decisive one way or the other.

no decisive passage. Zimmer<sup>2</sup> sees traces in one passage of the Rigveda<sup>3</sup> that in times of peace there was no king in some states, the members of the royal family holding equal rights. He compares this with the state of affairs in early Germany.<sup>4</sup> But the passage merely shows that the nobles could be called Rājan, and is not decisive for the sense ascribed to it by Zimmer. Rājani, 'descendant of Rajana,' is the patronymic of Ugradeva in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa (xiv. 3, 17; xxiii. 16, 11) and the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka (v. 4, 12).

Rājanya is the regular term in Vedic literature<sup>1</sup> for a man of the royal family, probably including also those who were not actually members of that family, but were nobles, though it may have been originally restricted to members of the royal family. This, however, does not appear clearly from any passage; the term may originally have applied to all the nobles irrespective of kingly power. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>2</sup> the Rājanya is different from the Rājaputra, who is literally a son of the king. The functions and place of the Rājanya are described under Kṣatriya, which expression later normally takes the place of Rājanya as a designation for the ruling class. His high place is shown by the fact that in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā<sup>3</sup> he is ranked with the learned Brahmin and the Rājanya-bandhu denotes a Rājanya, but usually with a depreciating sense. Thus in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> Janaka is called by the Brahmins, whom he defeated in disputation, 'a fellow of a Rājanya'; the same description is applied to Pravāhaṇa Jaivali in the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad<sup>2</sup> for a similar reason. On the other hand, in one passage<sup>3</sup> where reference is made to men eating apart from women, princes are said to do so most of all: the term Rājanyabandhu cannot here be deemed to be contemptuous, unless, indeed, it is the expression of Brahmin contempt for princes, such as clearly appears in the treatment of Nagnajit in another passage.<sup>4</sup> Again, in a passage<sup>5</sup> in which the four castes are mentioned, the Vaiśya precedes the Rājanyabandhu, a curious inversion of the order of the second and third castes.<sup>6</sup>

Rāja-pati, 'lord of kings,' is found in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (xi. 4, 3, 9) as an epithet of Soma. It is not used elsewhere as a title of imperial temporal supremacy: see Rājya.

Rāja-pitr is one of the titles given to the king in the rite of the Rājasūya ('royal consecration') according to the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (viii. 12, 5; 17, 5). It probably designates the king as 'father of a king,' and indicates the hereditary character of the monarchy. Possibly the later plan<sup>1</sup> of associating the king's son in the monarchy prevailed in earlier times also.

Rāja-putra, 'king's son,' 'prince,' seems to be capable of being interpreted literally in every passage of the older literature<sup>1</sup> in which it is found, though it may also be capable of a wider interpretation.<sup>2</sup> Later the Rājaputra degenerates into a mere 'landowner.'<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Rv. x. 40, 3; Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, vii. 17, 6 (of Viśvāmitra, but probably in a mythical sense); Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, xix. 1, 4; Kāthaka Saṃhitā, xiv. 8; Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 8, 5, 1; Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiii. 4, 2, 5; 5, 2, 5, etc.

<sup>2</sup> Kāthaka Saṃhitā, xxviii. 1, may

Rāja-puruṣa denotes a 'royal servant' in the Nirukta (ii. 3). Cf. Pūruṣa.

Rāja-mātra is found in the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa (xxvii. 6) and the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra (xvii. 5, 3. 4; 15, 3), where it seems to include 'the whole class of persons (who could be called) Rājan'—i.e., the Rājaputras and the Rājanyas.

Rāja-yakṣma, 'royal sickness,' is mentioned in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and several times later on.<sup>2</sup> Zimmer<sup>3</sup> identifies it with consumption: this identification seems certain, being supported by the later view of the disease.<sup>4</sup> Bloomfield<sup>5</sup> suggests 'king's evil,' or syphilis, as the sense, but this is not probable.

Rāja-sūya is the name in the Atharvaveda<sup>1</sup> and the later literature<sup>2</sup> of the ceremony of the 'royal consecration.' The rite is described at great length in the Sūtras,<sup>3</sup> but its main features are clearly outlined in the Brāhmaṇas,<sup>4</sup> while the verses used in the ceremony are preserved in the Saṃhitās of the Yajurveda.<sup>5</sup> Besides much mere priestly elaboration, the ritual contains traces of popular ceremonial. For example, the king is clothed in the ceremonial garments of his rank, and provided with bow and arrow as emblems of sovereignty. He is formally anointed; he performs a mimic cow raid against a relative of his;<sup>6</sup> or engages in a sham fight with a Rājanya.<sup>7</sup> A game of dice is played in which he is made to be the victim;<sup>8</sup> he symbolically ascends the quarters of the sky as an indication of his universal rule; and steps on a tiger skin, thus gaining the strength and the pre-eminence of the tiger.

That this points to human sacrifice having once formed part of the ritual of the Rājasūya as supposed by Hillebrandt, loc. cit.; Weber, 47; and Oldenberg, 366, n. 1, seems very doubtful.

A list of the consecrated kings is given in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>9</sup> where the royal inauguration is called the 'great unction' (mahābhiṣeka) connected with Indra. Rāja-stambāyana, 'descendant of Rājastamba,' is the patronymic of Yajñavacas in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>1</sup>

Rājādhirāja, 'king of kings,' later a title of paramount sovereignty, is only found in Vedic literature in the late Taittirīya Āraṇyaka (i. 31, 6) as a divine epithet.

Rājāśva ('king's horse') in the Atharvaveda (vi. 102, 2) seems merely to denote a powerful horse.

Rājya in the Atharvaveda<sup>1</sup> and later<sup>2</sup> regularly denotes 'sovereign power,' from which, as the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>3</sup> notes, the Brahmin is excluded.

In addition to Rājya, the texts give other expressions of sovereign power. Thus the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>4</sup> contends that the Rājasūya sacrifice is that of a king, the Vājapeya that of a Samrāj or emperor, the status of the latter (Sāmrajya) being superior to that of the former (Rājya). The sitting on a throne (Āsandī) is given in the same text<sup>5</sup> as one of the characteristics of the Samrāj. Elsewhere<sup>6</sup> Svārājya, 'uncontrolled dominion,' is opposed to Rājya. In the ritual of the Rājasūya the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>7</sup> gives a whole series of terms: Rājya, Sāmrajya, Bhaujya, Svārājya, Vairājya, Pāramesthya, and Māhārājya, while Ādhipatyā, 'supreme power,' is found elsewhere.<sup>8</sup> But there is no reason to believe that these terms refer to essentially different forms of authority. A king might be called a Mahārāja or a Samrāj, without really being an overlord of kings; he would be so termed if he were an important sovereign, or by his own entourage out of compliment, as was Janaka of Videha.<sup>9</sup> That a really great monarchy of the Aśoka or Gupta type ever existed in the Vedic period seems highly improbable.<sup>10</sup>

Romaśā is mentioned in the Brhaddevatā<sup>1</sup> as the wife of king Bhāvayavya, and is credited with the authorship of a Rigvedic verse.<sup>2</sup> But in reality the word romaśā in that verse, which is the source of the legend, is merely an adjective meaning 'hairy.'

2. Rohiṇī. See Nakṣatra.

Rohit in some passages of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> denotes, according to the St. Petersburg Dictionary, a 'red mare,' while later<sup>2</sup> it denotes a 'red doe.'

iv. 4, 7; Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, ii. 33, 1 (cf. Bloomfield, Journal of the American Oriental Society, 15, 178, n.).

Cf. Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 82.

Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, xiv. 3, 12, etc. So Rohita in Av. xiii. 1, 1 et seq., represents the sun as a 'red horse.'

2. Rohita is a son of Hariścandra in the famous tale of Śunaḥśepa in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (vii. 14) and the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra (xv. 18, 8).

Rohitaka occurs in the Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā (iii. 9, 3) with a variant Rohītaka,<sup>1</sup> as the name of the tree Andersonia Rohitaka.

2. Rauhiṇa ('born under the Nakṣatra Rohiṇī') Vāsiṣṭha ('descendant of Vasiṣṭha'), is the name of a man in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka (i. 12, 5).

Rauhiṇāyana ('descendant of Rauhiṇa') is the patronymic of Priyavṛata in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (x. 3, 5, 14). It is also in the first two Vamśas (lists of teachers) in the Mādhyam-dina recension of the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (ii. 5, 20; iv. 5, 26) the name of a teacher, a pupil of Śaunaka and others.

Lakṣaṇa<sup>1</sup> or Lakṣman<sup>2</sup> denotes the 'mark' made on cattle by branding to distinguish ownership. According to the Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā,<sup>3</sup> it was to be made under the Nakṣatra Revatī, clearly because of the property indicated in the name ('wealthy') of that Nakṣatra. See Aṣṭakarnī.

<sup>1</sup> v. 33, 10. Cf. Ludwig, Translation of the Rigveda, 3, 155.

(Index), too, gives Aindra Laba as the author of that hymn. Cf. Bṛhaddevatā, viii. 40, with Macdonell's note. Cf. Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 90.

Lambana is the reading in the Kāṇva recension (v. 10, 1) of the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad for Āḍambara, 'drum,' in the Mādhyamīna recension (v. 12, 1).

Lavaṇa, 'salt,' is never mentioned in the Rigveda, only once in the Atharvaveda,<sup>1</sup> and not after that until the latest part of the Brāhmaṇas,<sup>2</sup> where it is regarded as of extremely high value.<sup>3</sup> This silence in the early period is somewhat surprising if the regions then occupied by the Indians were the Panjab and the Indus valley, where salt abounds; it would at first sight seem less curious if the home of the early Vedic Indian is taken to be Kurukṣetra.<sup>4</sup> It is, however, quite conceivable that a necessary commodity might happen to be passed over without literary mention in a region where it is very common, but to be referred to in a locality where it is not found, and consequently becomes highly prized.

Lavana in the Nirukta (ii. 2) denotes the 'mowing' or 'reaping' of corn.

Lāṅgala is the regular word for 'plough' in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later.<sup>2</sup> It is described in a series of passages<sup>3</sup> as 'lance-pointed' (pavīravat or pavīravam), 'well-lying' (suśīmam),<sup>4</sup> and 'having a well-smoothed handle' (see Tsaru). See also Sira.

Lāṅgalāyana, 'descendant of Lāṅgala,' is the patronymic of Brahman Maudgalya ('descendant of Mudgala') in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (v. 3, 8).

Lāja, masc. plur., in the later Saṃhitās<sup>1</sup> and the Brāhmaṇas<sup>2</sup> denotes 'fried or parched grain.'

Cf. Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 269.

Lāji in the Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā (xxiii. 8) and the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa (iii. 9, 4, 8) is a word of uncertain meaning: according to Sāyaṇa, it is a vocative of Lājin, 'having parched grain'; according to Mahīdhara, it denotes a 'quantity of parched grain.'

Lātavya, 'descendant of Latu,' is the patronymic of Kūsāmba Svāyava in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> viii. 6, 8. Cf. Ṣaḍviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, iv. 7; Gopatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 1, 25 (a Gotra is there mentioned).

Luśākapi Khārgali ('descendant of Khārgala') is mentioned in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> as having cursed Kuṣītaka and the Kauṣītakins. He was a contemporary of Keśin Dālbyha according to the Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Roth, St. Petersburg Dictionary, s.v. 2, quotes no example of this meaning for the Rigveda, where he sees the word used only in the sense of 'place,' 'room,' 'free or open space.' But Rv. x. 14, 9, is a fairly certain example of the wider sense.

<sup>2</sup> Av. viii. 9, 1, 15; iv. 38, 5; xi. 5, 7; 8, 10, etc.; in ix. 5, 14, the worlds of heaven (divyu) and of earth (pārthiva) are distinguished; Vājasaneyi Samhitā, xxxii. 11 et seq., etc.

Cf. the obscure adhi-lodha-karṇa in the Taittirīya Samhitā, v. 6, 16, 1, perhaps meaning 'having quite red ears.' Yāska, Nirukta, iv. 12, equates the word with lubdha, 'confused,' but this does not suit the context. So also Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 84; Geldner, Vedische Studien, 2, 160; Rgveda, Glossar, 151, who sees in the word the designation of a noble steed.

Lopā is mentioned in the list of victims at the Aśvamedha ('horse sacrifice') in the Taittirīya Samhitā,<sup>1</sup> where Sāyaṇa explains it as a kind of bird, perhaps the carrion crow (śmaśāna-śakuni).

Lopāśa is the name of an animal, probably the 'jackal' or 'fox,' which is mentioned in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and is included in the list of victims at the Aśvamedha ('horse sacrifice') in the Yajurveda Samhitās.<sup>2</sup>

renders 'brass.' The sense of 'iron' is nowhere needed.

Cf. Vincent Smith, Indian Antiquary, 34, 230; and on the early history of metals; Mosso, Mediterranean Civilization, 57-62.

Loha-maṇi in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (vi. 2, 5) denotes a 'copper amulet,' as Böhtlingk<sup>1</sup> renders it, rather than a 'lump of gold,' as translated by Max Müller following the scholiast.

Cf. Eggeling, Sacred Books of the East, 41, 90, n.; Schrader, Prehistoric Antiquities, 189.

Lohita, often occurring as an adjective meaning 'red,' is used as a neuter substantive in the Atharvaveda (xi. 3, 7) to denote a metal, presumably 'copper.' As a proper name it is found in Āpastamba Śrauta Sūtra, xxiv. 9, 7.

Lohitāyasa, 'red metal,' 'copper,' is the variant of Loha in the Maitrāyaṇī (ii. 11, 5; iv. 4, 4) and Kāthaka (xviii. 10) Saṃhitās.

Lohitāhi, 'red snake,' is the name of a variety of serpent mentioned in the list of victims at the Aśvamedha ('horse sacrifice') in the Yajurveda Saṃhitās.<sup>1</sup>

Lauhitya, 'descendant of Lohita,' is the patronymic of a large number of teachers in the Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa, which clearly must have been the special object of study of the Lauhitya family. See Kṛṣṇadatta, Kṛṣṇarāta, Jayaka, Tri-veda Kṛṣṇarāta, Dakṣa Jayanta, Palligupta, Mitrabhūti, Yaśasvin Jayanta, Vipāścīt Dr̥ḍhajayanta, Vaipaścīta Dār̥ḍhajayanti, Vaipaścīta Dār̥ḍhajayanti Dr̥ḍhajayanta, Śyāmajayanta, Śyāmasujayanta, Satyaśravas. A Lauhitya or Lauhikya is also mentioned as a teacher in the Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka.<sup>1</sup> The form of name (Jayanta) affected by the family, and the silence of the older texts, proves that they were modern.

Cf. Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 257.

Vanijyā in the Brāhmaṇas<sup>1</sup> denotes the business of a merchant (Vanij) 'trade.'

2. Vatsa occurs several times in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> as the name of a singer, a son or descendant of Kaṇva. In the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>2</sup> he is said to have passed successfully through a fire ordeal to which he resorted for the purpose of proving to his rival, Medhātithi, the purity of his descent. He is also mentioned in the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra<sup>3</sup> as the recipient of bounty from Tirindara Pāraśavya.

<sup>1</sup> v. 37, 3; 47, 6; vii. 69, 3; viii. 26, 13; x. 27, 12; 85, 30; 107, 9.

2. Vadhū is in one passage of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> taken by Roth<sup>2</sup> to denote a 'female animal,' while Zimmer<sup>3</sup> urges that it means a 'female slave.' As far as the use of Vadhū goes, either meaning is abnormal, for if Vadhū never elsewhere means a female animal (from vah, to 'draw' a cart), neither does it denote a slave: as the passage refers to a gift of fifty Vadhūs by Trasadasyu Paurukutsya to the singer, the latter must have been a polygamist of an advanced type to require fifty wives. The same doubt arises in the case of vadhūmant, which is used in the Rigveda and Atharvaveda as an epithet of the chariot (Ratha),<sup>4</sup> of horses (Aśva),<sup>5</sup> and of buffaloes (Uṣṭra).<sup>6</sup> Zimmer sees in all cases a reference to slaves in the chariots or with the horses: this interpretation has the support of the Bṛhaddevatā.<sup>7</sup> Roth's version of the references to horses or buffaloes as 'suitable for draught' is not very happy; if vadhū is really a female animal vadhūmant means rather 'together with mares,' or 'together with female buffaloes,' which makes reasonable sense.<sup>8</sup>

Vadhṛimatī, 'having an impotent man as a husband,' seems in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> to be the name of a woman who owed the restoration of her husband's virility to the Aśvins, and obtained a son, Hiranyahasta. The word is, however, possibly only descriptive.

1. Vadhry-aśva, 'having castrated horses,' is the name in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> of a prince, the father of Divodāsa, and an energetic supporter of the fire cult, as was his son after him. He is mentioned in a long list of names in the Atharvaveda.<sup>2</sup>

1. Varna, 'colour,' is a common word in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later.<sup>2</sup> A large number of colours are enumerated in Vedic literature, but it is not possible to deduce any clear information as to the accuracy with which the Vedic Indian distinguished colours, or as to the principle on which his distinctions were based. The Rigveda seems to show that red or yellow colours were the most noticed, but this may be accidental.<sup>3</sup> 'Black' or 'dark' is denoted by kṛṣṇa, 'white' or 'light-coloured' by śukla or śveta. 'Black' seems to be meant in one passage of the Rigveda<sup>4</sup> by śyenī also. The series of words hari, hariṇa, harit, harita, seems, on the whole, to denote 'yellow,' but 'green' is also a possible rendering, since the epithet is used of the frog.<sup>7</sup> 'Brown' is certainly the meaning of babhrū, which is used of the Vibhītaka nut (see Akṣa). 'Reddish-brown' seems to be the tinge implied by kapila<sup>8</sup> ('monkey-coloured'), while pingala appears to denote a shade of brown in which yellow pre-

2. Varṇa (lit. 'colour') in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> is applied to denote classes of men, the Dāsa and the Āryan Varṇa being contrasted, as other passages<sup>2</sup> show, on account of colour. But this use is confined to distinguishing two colours: in this respect the Rigveda differs fundamentally from the later Saṃhitās and Brāhmaṇas,<sup>3</sup> where the four castes (varṇāḥ) are already fully recognized.

(a) Caste in the Rigveda.—The use of the term Varṇa is not, of course, conclusive for the question whether caste existed in the Rigveda. In one sense it must be admitted to have existed: the Puruṣa-sūkta, 'hymn of man,' in the tenth Roth, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, 48, 113, reads varṇaśeṣas in Rv. v. 65, 5.

<sup>2</sup> See Dasyu, Dāsa; Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 113, 114. There is no trace in Vedic literature of any real distinction of colour save this main one. In the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 1, 23, the Brahman's colour is white (śukla); the Kāthaka Saṃhitā, xi. 6, calls the Vaisya 'white' (śukla), the Rājanya 'swarthy' (dhūmra); and the later view makes the four castes black, yellow (pīta), red (rakta), and white respectively. See Weber, Indische Studien, 10, 10, 11; Muir, Sanskrit Texts, 1<sup>2</sup>, 153, etc., 176. Cf. also Av. iii. 4, 6, where Whitney, Translation of the Atharvaveda, 90, with hesitation suggests the reading varṇaiḥ, 'castes.'

<sup>3</sup> Catvāro varṇāḥ, 'four castes,' Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, v. 5, 4, 9; vi. 4, 4, 13; śūdra varṇa, 'Śūdra caste,' ibid., vi. 4, 4, 9; Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad, i. 2, 25; Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, viii. 4. Cf. also ārya varṇa opposed to śūdra, Kāthaka Saṃhitā, xxxiv. 5; Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, v. 5, 17, and see Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, i. 2, 6, 7. Varṇa appears in this sense sometimes in Pāli. Maṇḍala<sup>4</sup> clearly contemplates the division of mankind into four classes—the Brāhmaṇa, Rājanya, Vaiśya, and Śūdra. But the hymn being admittedly late,<sup>5</sup> its evidence is not cogent for the bulk of the Rigveda. Zimmer<sup>6</sup> has with great force combatted the view that the Rigveda was produced in a society that knew the caste system. He points out that the Brāhmaṇas<sup>7</sup> show us the Vedic Indians on the Indus as unbrahminized, and not under the caste system; he argues that the Rigveda was the product of tribes living in the Indus region and the Panjab; later on a part of this people, who had wandered farther east, developed the peculiar civilization of the caste system. He adopts the arguments of Muir,<sup>8</sup> derived from the study of the data of the Rigveda, viz.: that (a) the four castes appear only in the late Puruṣasūkta; (b) the term Varṇa, as shown above, covers the three highest castes of later times, and is only contrasted with Dāsa; (c) that Brāhmaṇa is rare in the Rigveda, Kṣatriya occurs seldom,<sup>9</sup> Rājanya only in the Puruṣasūkta, where too, alone, Vaiśya and Śūdra are found; (d) that Brahman denotes at first 'poet,' 'sage,' and then 'officiating priest,' or still later a special class of priest; (e) that in some only of the passages<sup>10</sup> where it occurs does Brahman denote a 'priest by profession,' while in others it denotes something peculiar to the individual, designating a person distinguished for genius or virtue, or specially chosen to receive divine inspiration.<sup>11</sup> Brāhmaṇa, on the other hand, as Muir admits,<sup>12</sup> already denotes a hereditary professional priesthood.

Zimmer connects the change from the casteless system of the Rigveda to the elaborate system of the Yajurveda with the advance of the Vedic Indians to the east, comparing the Germanic invasions that transformed the German tribes into monarchies closely allied with the church. The needs of a conquering people evoke the monarch; the lesser princes sink to the position of nobles; for repelling the attacks of aborigines or of other Āryan tribes, and for quelling the revolts of the subdued population, the state requires a standing army in the shape of the armed retainers of the king, and beside the nobility of the lesser princes arises that of the king's chief retainers, as the Thegns supplemented the Gesiths of the Anglo-Saxon monarchies.<sup>13</sup> At the same time the people ceased to take part in military matters, and under climatic influences left the conduct of war to the nobility and their retainers, devoting themselves to agriculture, pastoral pursuits, and trade. But the advantage won by the nobles over the people was shared by them with the priesthood, the origin of whose power lies in the Purohitaship, as Roth first saw.<sup>14</sup>

Originally the prince could sacrifice for himself and the people, but the Rigveda<sup>15</sup> itself shows cases, like those of Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha illustrating forcibly the power of the Purohita, though at the same time the right of the noble to act as Purohita is seen in the case of Devāpi Ārṣṭiseṇa.<sup>16</sup> The Brahmins saw their opportunity, through the Purohitaship, of gaining practical power during the confusion and difficulties of the wars of invasion, and secured it, though only after many struggles, the traces of which are seen in the Epic tradition.<sup>17</sup> The Atharvaveda<sup>18</sup> also preserves relics of these conflicts in its narration of the ruin of the Śrñjayas because of oppressing Brahmins, and besides other hymns of the Atharvaveda (viii-xii), the Śatarudriya litany of the Yajurveda<sup>19</sup> reflects the period of storm and stress when the aboriginal population was still seething with discontent, and Rudra was worshipped as the patron god of all sorts of evil doers.<sup>20</sup>

This version of the development of caste has received a good deal of acceptance in its main outlines, and it may almost be regarded as the recognized version.<sup>21</sup> It has, however, always been opposed by some scholars, such as Haug,<sup>22</sup> Kern,<sup>23</sup> Ludwig,<sup>24</sup> and more recently by Oldenberg<sup>25</sup> and by Geldner.<sup>26</sup> The matter may be to some extent simplified by recognizing at once that the caste system is one that has progressively developed, and that it is not legitimate to see in the Rigveda the full caste system even of the Yajurveda; but at the same time it is difficult to doubt that the system was already well on its way to general acceptance. The argument from the non-brahminical character of the Vrātyas of the Indus and Panjab loses its force when it is remembered that there is much evidence in favour of placing the composition of the bulk of the Rigveda, especially the books<sup>27</sup> in which Sudās appears with Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra, in the east, the later Madhyadeśa, a view supported by Pischel,<sup>28</sup> Geldner,<sup>29</sup> Hopkins,<sup>30</sup> and Macdonell.<sup>31</sup> Nor is it possible to maintain that Brahman in the Rigveda merely means a 'poet' or 'sage.' It is admitted by Muir that in some passages it must mean a hereditary profession; in fact, there is not a single passage in which it occurs where the sense of 'priest' is not allowable, since the priest was of course the singer. Moreover, there are traces in the Rigveda of the threefold<sup>32</sup> or fourfold<sup>33</sup> division of the people into brahma, kṣatram, and viśaḥ, or into the three classes and the servile population. Nor even in respect to the later period, any more than to the Rigveda, is the view correct that regards the Vaiśyas as not taking part in war. The Rigveda evidently<sup>34</sup> knows of no restriction of war to a nobility and its retainers, but the late Atharvaveda<sup>35</sup> equally classes the folk with the bala, 'power,' representing the Viś as associated with the Sabhā, Samiti, and Senā, the assemblies of the people and the armed host. Zimmer<sup>36</sup> explains these references as due to tradition only; but this is hardly a legitimate argument, resting, as it does, on the false assumption that only a Kṣatriya can fight. But it is (see Kṣatriya) very doubtful whether Kṣatriya means anything more than a member of the nobility, though later, in the Epic, it included the retainers of the nobility, who increased in numbers with the growth of military monarchies, and though later the ordinary people did not necessarily take part in wars, an abstention that is, however, much exaggerated if it is treated as an absolute one. The Kṣatriyas were no doubt a hereditary body; monarchy was already hereditary (see Rājan), and it is admitted that the Śūdras were a separate body: thus all the elements of the caste system were already in existence. The Purohita, indeed, was a person of great importance, but it is clear, as Oldenberg<sup>37</sup> urges, that he was not the creator of the power of the priesthood, but owed his position, and the influence he could in consequence exert, to the fact that the sacrifice required for its proper performance the aid of a hereditary priest in whose possession was the traditional sacred knowledge.

Nor can any argument for the non-existence of the caste system be derived from cases like that of Devāpi. For, in the first place, the Upaniṣads show kings in the exercise of the priestly functions of learning and teaching, and the Upaniṣads are certainly contemporaneous with an elaborated caste system. In the second place the Rigvedic evidence is very weak, for Devāpi, who certainly acts as Purohita, is not stated in the

Rigveda to be a prince at all, though Yāska<sup>38</sup> calls him a Kauravya; the hymns attributed to kings and others cannot be vindicated for them by certain evidence, though here, again, the Brāhmaṇas do not scruple to recognize Rājanyarṣis, or 'royal sages'; and the famous Viśvāmitra shows in the Rigveda no sign of the royal character which the Brāhmaṇas insist on fastening on him in the shape of royal descent in the line of Jahnu.<sup>39</sup>

(b) Caste in the later Saṃhitās and Brāhmaṇas.—The relation between the later and the earlier periods of the Vedic history of caste must probably be regarded in the main as the hardening of a system already formed by the time of the Rigveda.

2. The Relation of the Castes.—The ritual literature is full of minute differences respecting the castes. Thus, for example, the Śatapatha prescribes different sizes of funeral mounds for the four castes.<sup>54</sup> Different modes of address are laid down for the four castes,<sup>55</sup> as ehi, 'approach'; āgaccha, 'come'; ādrava, 'run up'; ādhāva, 'hasten up,' which differ in degrees of politeness. The representatives of the four castes are dedicated at the Puruṣamedha ('human sacrifice') to different deities.<sup>56</sup> The Sūtras have many similar rules.<sup>57</sup>

But the three upper castes in some respects differ markedly from the fourth, the Śūdras. The latter are in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>58</sup> declared not fit to be addressed by a Dikṣita, 'consecrated person,' and no Śūdra is to milk the cow whose milk is to be used for the Agnihotra<sup>59</sup> ('fire-oblation'). On the other hand, in certain passages, the Śūdra is given a place in the Soma sacrifice,<sup>60</sup> and in the Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa<sup>61</sup> there are given formulæ for the placing of the sacrificial fire not only for the three upper castes, but also for the Rathakāra, <sup>51</sup> Cf. Av. v. 18, 15, where the two lower castes are addressed (Kṣatriya and Vaiśya) respectively as nr-pati and paśu-pati, Whitney, Translation of the Atharvaveda, 252; Kāthaka Saṃhitā, xii. 1; xxix. 10; Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā, xxxviii. 19.

'chariot-maker.' Again, in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>62</sup> the Brāhmaṇa is opposed as 'eater of the oblation' to the members of the other three castes.

The characteristics of the several castes are given under Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya and Rājan, Vaiśya, Śūdra: they may be briefly summed up as follows: The Viś forms the basis of the state on which the Brahman and Kṣatra rest;<sup>63</sup> the Brahman and Kṣatra are superior to the Viś;<sup>64</sup> while all three classes are superior to the Śūdras. The real power of the state rested with the king and his nobles, with their retainers, who may be deemed the Kṣatriya element. Engaged in the business of the protection of the country, its administration, the decision of legal cases, and in war, the nobles subsisted, no doubt, on the revenues in kind levied from the people, the king granting to them villages (see Grāma) for their maintenance, while some of them, no doubt, had lands of their own cultivated for them by slaves or by tenants. The states were seemingly small:<sup>65</sup> there are no clear signs of any really large kingdoms, despite the mention of Mahārājas. The people, engaged in agriculture, pastoral pursuits, and trade (Vanij), paid tribute to the king and nobles for the protection afforded them. That, as Baden-Powell suggests,<sup>66</sup> they were not themselves agriculturists is probably erroneous; some might be landowners on a large scale, and draw their revenues from Śūdra tenants, or even Āryan tenants, but that the people as a whole were in this sacrifices,' and their recollections of the glories of the Bharatas, represent a more advanced stage of social relations and of city life, but even they hardly know really great kingdoms.

<sup>66</sup> Indian Village Community and Village Communities in India, where much stress is laid on the idea of a settlement of Aryans on lands already occupied by Dravidian clans, much as Anglo-Saxon invaders on one theory occupied lands already held by Britons who became serfs, while the invaders were a land-holding aristocracy, a theory supported by the fact that the normal holding of a hide is estimated at 120 acres.

position is extremely unlikely.<sup>67</sup> In war the people shared the conflicts of the nobles, for there was not yet any absolute separation of the functions of the several classes. The priests may be divided into two classes—the Purohitas of the kings, who guided their employers by their counsel, and were in a position to acquire great influence in the state, as it is evident they actually did, and the ordinary priests who led quiet lives, except when they were engaged on some great festival of a king or a wealthy noble.<sup>68</sup>

The relations and functions of the castes are well summed up in a passage of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>69</sup> which treats of them as opposed to the Kṣatriya. The Brāhmaṇa is a receiver of gifts (ā-dāyī), a drinker of Soma (ā-pāyī), a seeker of food (āvasāyī),<sup>70</sup> and liable to removal at will (yathākāma-prayāpyaḥ).<sup>71</sup> The Vaiśya is tributary to another (anyasya balikṛt), to be lived on by another (anyasyādyāḥ), and to be oppressed at will (yathākāma-jyeyaḥ).<sup>72</sup> The Śūdra is the servant of another (anyasya presyaḥ), to be expelled at will (kāmotthāpyaḥ), and to be slain

<sup>67</sup> Cf. Hopkins, India, Old and New, 222. The point is much the same as that at issue between the different schools of opinion as to early English history. Did the Aryans in India occupy the land as a people, driving out or exterminating or enslaving the Dāsas, and themselves carrying on the occupations of a people, or did they merely form a small aristocracy of superior military force, and were the Kṣatriyas the true Aryans? The evidence of the Rigveda is really fatal to the latter alternative hypothesis.

<sup>68</sup> For the superiority of the Brāhmaṇa to the Kṣatriya or Rājanya, see Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, xi. 11, 3; Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā, xxi. 21; Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, v. 1, 1, 12; 4, 4, 15; xiii. 1, 9, 1; 3, 7, 8; Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, vii. 15, 8; viii. 9, 6; Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra, xv. 20, 12. The Brāhmaṇa is, in his turn, dependent on the king (Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 2, 3, 3; v. 4, 2, 7), and at the Rājasūya sits beside him, but is none the less superior (Bṛhadāranyaka Upaniṣad, i. 2, 23). The Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā, xxviii. 5, says the Kṣatra is over the Brahman, but this is not a usual view. Cf. xxvii. 4. A Brāhmaṇa can get along without a Kṣatriya, but not vice versa (Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, iv. 1, 4, 6), and a Rājanya with a Brāhmaṇa surpasses all other Rājanyas (Taittiriya Saṃhitā, v. 1, 10, 3; Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā, xix. 10; xxvii. 4, etc.).

<sup>71</sup> Muir, Haug, and Weber take the word as active in sense, 'moving at will.' But both the parallelism of the passage and the formation of the word require a passive causative sense. The reference is perhaps to the general political control of the king over the priest, whom he can 'move on' from place to place.

at pleasure (yathākāma-vadhyah).<sup>73</sup> The descriptions seem calculated to show the relation of each of the castes to the Rājanya. Even the Brāhmaṇa he can control, whilst the Vaiśya is his inferior and tributary, whom he can remove without cause from his land,<sup>74</sup> but who is still free, and whom he cannot maim or slay without due process. The Śūdra has no rights of property or life against the noble, especially the king.

The passage is a late one, and the high place of the Kṣatriya is to some extent accounted for by this fact. It is clear that in the course of time the Vaiśya fell more and more in position with the hardening of the divisions of caste. Weber<sup>75</sup> shows reason for believing that the Vājapeya sacrifice, a festival of which a chariot race forms an integral part,<sup>76</sup> was, as the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra<sup>77</sup> says, once a sacrifice for a Vaiśya, as well as for a priest or king. But the king, too, had to suffer diminution of his influence at the hands of the priest: the Taittirīya texts<sup>78</sup> show that the Vājapeya was originally a lesser sacrifice which, in the case of a king, was followed by the Rājasūya, or consecration of him as an overlord of lesser kings, and in that of the Brahmin by the Bṛhaspatisava, a festival celebrated on his appointment as a royal Purohita. But the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>79</sup> exalts the Vājapeya, in which a priest could be the sacrificer, over the Rājasūya, from which he was excluded, and identifies it with the Bṛhaspatisava, a clear piece of juggling in the interests of the priestly pretensions. But we must not overestimate the value of such passages, or the exaltation of the Purohita in the later books of the Śatapatha

<sup>74</sup> This seems to be the most probable reference of yathākāmajyeyah. The expulsion of the Vaiśya is here not in allusion to quasi-ownership of land by the King or Kṣatriya; it is an act of royal authority, not an incident of tenure. and Aitareya Brāhmaṇas as evidence of a real growth in the priestly power: these books represent the views of the priests of what their own powers should be, and to some extent were in the Madhyadesa. Another side of the picture is presented in the Pāli literature,<sup>80</sup> which, belonging to a later period than the Vedic, undoubtedly underestimates the position of the priests; while the Epic,<sup>81</sup> more nearly contemporaneous with the later Vedic period, displays, despite all priestly redaction, the temporal superiority of the nobility in clear light.

Although clear distinctions were made between the different castes, there is little trace in Vedic literature of one of the leading characteristics of the later system, the impurity communicated by the touch or contact of the inferior castes,<sup>82</sup> which is seen both directly in the purification rendered necessary in case of contact with a Śūdra, and indirectly in the prohibition of eating in company with men of lower caste.<sup>83</sup> It is true that prohibition of eating in company with others does appear,<sup>84</sup> but not in connexion with caste: its purpose is to preserve the peculiar sanctity of those who perform a certain rite or believe in a certain doctrine; for persons who eat of the same food together, according to primitive thought, acquire the same characteristics and enter into a sacramental communion. But Vedic literature does not yet show that to take food from an inferior caste was forbidden as destroying

Senart, Les Castes dans l'Inde, 48 et seq., 212 et seq., attributes great importance to the question of eating together, and compares the sacrificial meals of the gens at Rome, where strangers were excluded (Fustel de Coulanges, La Cité Antique, 117). But this is not conclusive; a caste is not a gens, and the gens excluded strangers only at a solemn festival, when the whole gens renewed its blood kinship. If we have no evidence exactly establishing this for the Gotra in early Vedic literature, we need not hesitate to believe that in the earliest Vedic period the Gotra had solemn festivals of union, and of communication with the dead, but that again does not explain or amount to the caste prohibition of taking food from an inferior.

purity.<sup>85</sup> Nor, of course, has the caste system developed the constitution with a head, a council, and common festivals which the modern caste has; for such an organization is not found even in the Epic or in the Pāli literature.<sup>86</sup> The Vedic characteristics of caste are heredity, pursuit of a common occupation, and restriction on intermarriage.

3. Restrictions on Intermarriage.—Arrian, in his Indica,<sup>87</sup> probably on the authority of Megasthenes, makes the prohibition of marriage between γένη, no doubt ‘castes,’ a characteristic of Indian life. The evidence of Pāli literature<sup>88</sup> is in favour of this view, though it shows that a king could marry whom he wished, and could make his son by that wife the heir apparent. But it equally shows that there were others who held that not the father’s but the mother’s rank determined the social standing of the son. Though Manu<sup>89</sup> recognizes the possibility of marriage with the next lower caste as producing legitimate children, still he condemns the marriage of an Āryan with a woman of lower caste. The Pāraskara Gṛhya Sūtra<sup>90</sup> allows the marriage of a Kṣatriya with a wife of his own caste or of the lower caste, of a Brahmin with a wife of his own caste or of the two lower classes, and of a Vaiśya with a Vaiśya wife only. But it quotes the opinion of others that all of them can marry a Śūdra wife, while other authorities condemn the marriage with a Śūdra wife in certain circumstances, which implies that in other cases it might be justified.<sup>91</sup> The earlier

<sup>85</sup> For a case of objection to eating food after another, see Chāndogya Upaniṣad, i. 10, 1. Possibly the idea there is that eating the food of a chief is dangerous, since the eater thus enters into possession of part of his substance, and consequently at once becomes an object of anger to the chief, as well as of danger to himself; for the chief may be so full of divine force that it would be unsafe for an ordinary man to be assimilated to him—a common idea in primitive societies. See also Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, v. 8, 13.

Allarisches Jus Civile, 273 et seq.; Kovalovsky, Famille et Propriété Primitives, 119; Fustel de Coulanges, op. cit., 118, 119). But here again the system may have applied to the Gotra without its really explaining the later appearance of the practice in the caste, and the absence of the mention of a council in the early and late literature alike is conclusive against its existence.

literature bears out this impression: much stress is laid on descent from a Ṛṣi, and on purity of descent;<sup>92</sup> but there is other evidence for the view that even a Brāhmaṇa need not be of pure lineage. Kavaṣa Ailūṣa is taunted with being the son of a Dāsī, 'slave woman,'<sup>93</sup> and Vatsa was accused of being a Śūdrā's son, but established his purity by walking unhurt through the flames of a fire ordeal.<sup>94</sup> He who is learned (śuśruvān) is said to be a Brāhmaṇa, descended from a Ṛṣi (ārṣeya), in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā;<sup>95</sup> and Satyakāma, son of Jabālā, was accepted as a pupil by Hāridrumata Gautama, though he could not name his father.<sup>96</sup> The Kāthaka Saṃhitā<sup>97</sup> says that knowledge is all-important, not descent. But all this merely goes to show that there was a measure of laxity in the hereditary character of caste, not that it was not based on heredity. The Yajurveda Saṃhitās<sup>98</sup> recognize the illicit union of Ārya and Śūdrā, and vice versa: it is not unlikely that if illicit unions took place, legal marriage was quite possible. The Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa,<sup>99</sup> indeed, recognizes such a case in that of Dīrghatamas, son of the slave girl Uśij, if we may adopt the description of Uśij given in the Bṛhaddevatā.<sup>100</sup> forward for the Brāhmaṇa, who alone is a true husband and the real husband, even if the woman has had others, a Rājanya or a Vaiśya : a Śūdra husband is not mentioned, probably on purpose.<sup>102</sup> The marriage of Brāhmaṇas with Rājanya women is illustrated by the cases of Sukanyā, daughter of king Śaryāta, who married Cyavana,<sup>103</sup> and of Rathavīti's daughter, who married Śyāvāśva.<sup>104</sup>

4. Occupation and Caste.—The Greek authorities<sup>105</sup> and the evidence of the Jātakas<sup>106</sup> concur in showing it to have been the general rule that each caste was confined to its own occupations, but that the Brāhmaṇas did engage in many professions beside that of simple priest, while all castes gave members to the Śramaṇas, or homeless ascetics. The Jātakas<sup>107</sup> recognize the Brahmins as engaged in all sorts of occupations, as merchants, traders, agriculturists, and so forth. Matters are somewhat simpler in Vedic literature, where the Brāhmaṇas and Kṣatriyas appear as practically confined to their own professions of sacrifice and military or administrative functions. Ludwig<sup>108</sup> sees in Dīrghaśravas in the Rīgveda<sup>109</sup> a Brahmin reduced by indigence to acting as a merchant, as allowed even later by the Sūtra literature ; but this is not certain, though it is perfectly possible. More interesting is the question how far the Kṣatriyas practised the duties of priests ; the evidence here is conflicting. The best known case is, of course, that of Viśvāmitra. In the Rīgveda he appears merely as a priest who is attached to the court of Sudās, king of the Tṛtsus ; but in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>110</sup> he is called a king, a descendant of Jahnu, and the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>111</sup> refers to Śunaḥśepa's succeeding, through his adoption by Viśvāmitra, to the divine lore (daiva veda) of the Gāthins and the lordship of the Jahnu. That in fact this tradition is correct seems most improbable, but it serves at least to illustrate the existence of seers of royal origin. Such figures appear more than once in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa,<sup>112</sup> which knows the technical terms Rājanyarṣi and Devarājan corresponding to the later Rājarṣi, 'royal sage.' The Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa<sup>113</sup> says of one who knows a certain doctrine, 'being a king he becomes a seer' (rājā sann ṛṣir bhavati), and the Jaiminiya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa<sup>114</sup> applies the term Rājanya to a Brāhmaṇa. Again, it is argued that Devāpi Ārṣiṣeṇa, who acted as Purohita, according to the Rigveda,<sup>115</sup> for Śantanu, was a prince, as Yāska<sup>116</sup> says or implies he was.<sup>117</sup> But this assumption seems to be only an error of Yāska's. Since nothing in the Rigveda alludes to any relationship, it is impossible to accept Sieg's view<sup>118</sup> that the Rigveda recognizes the two as brothers, but presents the fact of a prince acting the part of Purohita as unusual and requiring explanation. The principle, however, thus accepted by Sieg as to princes in the Rigveda seems sound enough. Again, Muir<sup>119</sup> has argued that Hindu tradition, as shown in Sāyana,<sup>120</sup> regards many hymns of the Rigveda as composed by royal personages, but he admits that in many cases the ascription is wrong; it may be added that in the case of Prthī Vainya, where the hymn<sup>121</sup> ascribed to him seems to be his, it is not shown in the hymn itself that he is other than a seer; the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>122</sup> calls him a king, but that is probably of no more value than the later tradition as to Viśvāmitra. The case of Viśvantara and the Śyāparṇas mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>123</sup> has been cited<sup>124</sup> as that of a king sacrificing without priestly aid, but the interpretation is quite uncertain, while the parallel of the Kaśyapas, Asitamṛgas, and Bhūtavīras mentioned in the course of the narrative renders it highly probable that the king had other priests to carry out the sacrifice.

Somewhat different are a series of other cases found in the Upaniṣads, where the Brahma doctrine is ascribed to royal persons. Thus Janaka is said in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>125</sup> to have become a Brahman; Ajātaśatru taught Gārgya Bālāki;<sup>126</sup> Pravāhaṇa Jaivali instructed Śvetaketu Āruṇeya,<sup>127</sup> as well as Śilaka Śālāvatya<sup>128</sup> and Caikitāyana Dālbhya;<sup>128</sup> and Aśvapati Kaikeya taught Brahmins.<sup>129</sup> It has been deduced<sup>130</sup> from such passages that the Brahma doctrine was a product of the Kṣatriyas. This conclusion is, however, entirely doubtful,<sup>131</sup> for kings were naturally willing to be flattered by the ascription to them of philosophic activity, and elsewhere<sup>132</sup> the opinion of a Rājanya is treated with contempt.

It is probably a fair deduction that the royal caste did not much concern itself with the sacred lore of the priests, though it is not unlikely that individual exceptions occurred. But that warriors became priests, that an actual change of caste took place, is quite unproved by a single genuine example. That it was impossible we cannot say, but it seems not to have taken place. To be distinguished from a caste change, as Fick<sup>133</sup> points out, is the fact that a member of any caste could, in the later period at least, become a Śramaṇa, as is recorded in effect of many kings in the Epic.<sup>134</sup> Whether the practice is Vedic is not clear: Yāska<sup>135</sup> records it of Devāpi, but this is not evidence for times much anterior to the rise of Buddhism.

On the other hand, the Brahmins, or at least the Purohitas, accompanied the princes in battle, and probably, like the mediæval clergy, were not unprepared to fight,<sup>136</sup> as Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra seem to have done, and as priests do even in the Epic from time to time.<sup>137</sup> But a priest cannot be said to change caste by acting in this way.

More generally the possibility of the occurrence of change of caste may be seen in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>138</sup> where Śyāparṇa Sāyakāyana is represented as speaking of his offspring as if they could have become the nobles, priests, and commons of the Śalvas; and in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>139</sup> where Viśvantara is told that if the wrong offering were made his children would be of the three other castes. A drunken Ṛṣi of the Rigveda<sup>140</sup> talks as if he could be converted into a king. On the other hand, certain kings, such as Para Ātṇāra, are spoken of as performers of Sattras, 'sacrificial sessions.'<sup>141</sup> As evidence for caste exchange all this amounts to little; later a Brahmin might become a king, while the Ṛṣi in the Rigveda is represented as speaking in a state of intoxication; the great kings could be called sacrificers if, for the nonce, they were consecrated (dīkṣita), and so temporarily became Brahmins.<sup>142</sup> The hypothetical passages, too, do not help much. It would be unwise to deny the possibility of caste exchange, but it is not clearly indicated by any record. Even cases like that of Satyakāma Jābāla do not go far; for ex hypothesi that teacher did not know who his father was, and the latter could quite well have been a Brahmin.

It may therefore be held that the priests and the nobles practised hereditary occupations, and that either class was a closed body into which a man must be born. These two Varnas may thus be fairly regarded as castes. The Vaiśyas offer more difficulty, for they practised a great variety of occupations (see Vaiśya). Fick<sup>143</sup> concludes that there is no exact sense in which they can be called a caste, since, in the Buddhist literature, they were divided into various groups, which themselves practised endogamy such as the gahapatis, or smaller landowners, the setthiis, or large merchants and members of the various guilds, while there are clear traces<sup>144</sup> in the legal textbooks of a view that Brāhmaṇa and Kṣatriya stand opposed to all the other members of the community. But we need hardly accept this view for Vedic times, when the Vaiśya, the ordinary freeman of the tribe, formed a class or caste in all probability, which was severed by its free status from the Śūdras, and which was severed by its lack of priestly or noble blood from the two higher classes in the state. It is probably legitimate to hold that any Vaiśya could marry any member of the caste, and that the later divisions within the category of Vaiśyas are growths of divisions parallel with the original process by which priest and noble had grown into separate entities. The process can be seen to-day when new tribes fall under the caste system: each class tries to elevate itself in the social scale by refusing to intermarry with inferior classes on equal terms—hypergamy is often allowed—and so those Vaiśyas who acquired wealth in trade (Śreṣṭhin) or agriculture (the Pāli Gahapatis) would become distinct, as sub-castes, from the ordinary Vaiśyas. But it is not legitimate to regard Vaiśya as a theoretic caste; rather it is an old caste which is in process of dividing into innumerable sub-castes under influences of occupation, religion, or geographical situation.

Fick<sup>145</sup> denies also that the Śūdras ever formed a single caste: he regards the term as covering the numerous inferior races and tribes defeated by the Āryan invaders, but originally as denoting only one special tribe. It is reasonable to suppose that Śūdra was the name given by the Vedic Indians to the nations opposing them, and that these ranked as slaves beside the three castes—nobles, priests, and people—just as in the Anglo-Saxon and early German constitution beside the priests, the nobiles or eorls, and the ingenui, ordinary freemen or ceorls, there was a distinct class of slaves proper; the use of a generic expression to cover them seems natural, whatever its origin (see Śūdra). In the Āryan view a marriage of Śūdras could hardly be regulated by rules; any Śūdra could wed another, if such a marriage could be called a marriage at all, for a slave cannot in early law be deemed to be capable of marriage proper. But what applied in the early Vedic period became no doubt less and less applicable later when many aboriginal tribes and princes must have come into the Āryan community by peaceful means, or by conquest, without loss of personal liberty, and when the term Śūdra would cover many sorts of people who were not really slaves, but were freemen of a humble character occupied in such functions as supplying the numerous needs of the village, like the Caṇḍālas, or tribes living under Āryan control, or independent, such as the Niṣādas.

But it is also probable that the Śūdras came to include men of Āryan race, and that the Vedic period saw the degradation of Āryans to a lower social status. This seems, at any rate, to have been the case with the Rathakāras. In the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa<sup>146</sup> the Rathakāra is placed as a special class along with the Brāhmaṇas, Rājanyas, and Vaiśyas: this can hardly be interpreted except to mean that the Rathakāras were not included in the Āryan classes, though it is just possible that only a subdivision of the Vaiśyas is meant. There is other evidence<sup>147</sup> that the Rathakāras were regarded as Śūdras. But in the Atharvaveda<sup>148</sup> the Rathakāras and the Karmāras appear in a position of importance in connexion with the selection of the king; these two classes are also referred to in an honourable way in the Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā;<sup>149</sup> in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>150</sup> too, the Rathakāra is mentioned as a person of high standing. It is impossible to accept the view suggested by Fick<sup>151</sup> that these classes were originally non-Āryan; we must recognize that the Rathakāras, in early Vedic times esteemed for their skill, later became degraded because of the growth of the feeling that manual labour was not dignified. The development of this idea was a departure from the Āryan conception; it is not unnatural, however undesirable, and has a faint parallel in the class distinctions of modern Europe. Similarly, the Karmāra, the Takṣan,<sup>152</sup> the Carmamna, or 'tanner,' the weaver and others, quite dignified occupations in the Rīgveda, are reckoned as Śūdras in the Pāli texts.<sup>153</sup>

The later theory, which appears fully developed in the Dharma Sūtras,<sup>154</sup> deduces the several castes other than the original four from the intermarriage of the several castes. This theory has no justification in the early Vedic literature. In some cases it is obviously wrong; for example, the Sūta is said to be a caste of this kind, whereas it is perfectly clear that if the Sūtas did form a caste, it was one ultimately due to occupation. But there is no evidence at all that the Sūtas, Grāmanīs, and other members of occupations were real castes in the sense that they were endogamic in the early Vedic period. All that we can say is that there was a steady progress by which caste after caste was formed, occupation being an important determining feature, just as in modern times there are castes bearing names like Gopāla ('cowherd') Kaivarta or Dhīvara ('fisherman'), and Vanij ('merchant').<sup>155</sup>

Fick<sup>156</sup> finds in the Jātakas mention of a number of occupations whose members did not form part of any caste at all, such as the attendants on the court, the actors and dancers who went from village to village, and the wild tribes that lived in the mountains, fishermen, hunters, and so on. In Vedic times these people presumably fell under the conception of Śūdra, and may have included the Parṇaka, Paulkasa, Baina, who are mentioned with many others in the Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā and the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa in the list of victims at the Puruṣamedha ('human sacrifice'). The slaves also, whom Fick<sup>157</sup> includes in the same category, were certainly included in the term Śūdra.

5. Origin of the Castes.—The question of the origin of the castes presents some difficulty. The ultimate cause of the extreme rigidity of the caste system, as compared with the features of any other Āryan society, must probably be sought in the sharp distinction drawn from the beginning between the Āryan and the Śūdra. The contrast which the Vedic Indians felt as existing between themselves and the conquered population, and which probably rested originally on the difference of colour between the upper and the lower classes, tended to accentuate the natural distinctions of birth, occupation, and locality which normally existed among the Āryan Indians, but which among other Āryan peoples never developed into a caste system like that of India. The doctrine of hypergamy which marks the practical working of the caste system, seems clearly to point to the feeling that the Āryan could marry the Śūdṛā, but not the Śūdra the Āryā. This distinction probably lies at the back of all other divisions: its force may be illustrated by the peculiar state of feeling as to mixed marriages, for example, in the Southern States of America and in South Africa, or even in India itself, between the new invaders from Europe and the mingled population which now peoples the country. Marriages between persons of the white and the dark race are disapproved in principle, but varying degrees of condemnation attach to (1) the marriage of a man of the white race with a woman of the dark race;

(2) an informal connexion between these two; (3) a marriage between a woman of the white race and a man of the dark race; and (4) an informal connexion between these two. Each category, on the whole, is subject to more severe reprobation than the preceding one. This race element, it would seem, is what has converted social divisions into castes. There appears, then, to be a large element of truth in the theory, best represented by Risley,<sup>158</sup> which explains caste in the main as a matter of blood, and which holds that the higher the caste is, the greater is the proportion of Āryan blood.

The chief rival theory is undoubtedly that of Senart,<sup>159</sup> which places the greatest stress on the Āryan constitution of the family. According to Senart the Āryan people practised in affairs of marriage both a rule of exogamy, and one of endogamy. A man must marry a woman of equal birth, but not one of the same gens, according to Roman law as interpreted by Senart and Kovalevsky;<sup>160</sup> and an Athenian must marry an Athenian woman, but not one of the same γένος. In India these rules are reproduced in the form that one must not marry within the Gotra, but not without the caste. The theory, though attractively developed, is not convincing; the Latin and Greek parallels are not even probably accurate;<sup>161</sup> and in India the rule forbidding marriage within the Gotra is one which grows in strictness as the evidence grows later in date.<sup>162</sup>

On the other hand, it is not necessary to deny that the development of caste may have been helped by the family traditions of some gentes, or γένη, or Gotras. The Patricians of Rome for a long time declined intermarriage with the plebeians; the Athenian Eupatridai seem to have kept their γένη pure from contamination by union with lower blood; and there may well have been noble families among the Vedic Indians who intermarried only among themselves. Germans known to Tacitus<sup>163</sup> were divided into nobiles and ingenui, and the Anglo-Saxons into eorls and ceorls, noble and non-noble freemen.<sup>164</sup> The origin of nobility need not be sought in the Vedic period proper, for it may already have existed. It may have been due to the fact that the king, whom we must regard as originally elected by the people, was as king often in close relation with, or regarded as an incarnation of, the deity;<sup>165</sup> and that hereditary kingship would tend to increase the tradition of especially sacred blood: thus the royal family and its offshoots would be anxious to maintain the purity of their blood. In India, beside the sanctity of the king, there was the sanctity of the priest. Here we have in the family exclusiveness of king and nobles, and the similar exclusiveness of a priesthood which was not celibate, influences that make for caste, especially when accompanying the deep opposition between the general folk and the servile aborigines.

Caste, once created, naturally developed in different directions. Nesfield<sup>166</sup> was inclined to see in occupation the one ground of caste. It is hardly necessary seriously to criticize this view considered as an ultimate explanation of caste, but it is perfectly certain that guilds of workers tend to become castes. The carpenters (Takṣan), the chariot-makers (Rathakāra), the fishermen (Dhāvāra) and others are clearly of the type of caste, and the number extends itself as time goes on. But this is not to say that caste is founded on occupation pure and simple in its first origin, or that mere difference of occupation would have produced the system of caste without the interposition of the fundamental difference between Āryan and Dāsa or Śūdra blood and colour. This difference rendered increasingly important what the history of the Āryan peoples shows us to be declining, the distinction between the noble and the non-noble freemen, a distinction not of course ultimate, but one which seems to have been developed in the Āryan people before the separation of its various branches.

It is well known that the Iranian polity presents a division of classes comparable in some respects<sup>167</sup> with the Indian polity. The priests (Athravas) and warriors (Rathaesthas) are unmistakably parallel, and the two lower classes seem to correspond closely to the Pāli Gahapatis, and perhaps to the Śūdras.<sup>168</sup> But they are certainly not castes in the Indian sense of the word. There is no probability in the view of Senart<sup>169</sup> or of Risley<sup>170</sup> that the names of the old classes were later superimposed artificially on a system of castes that were different from them in origin. We cannot say that the castes existed before the classes, and that the classes were borrowed by India from Iran, as Risley maintains, ignoring the early Brāhmaṇa evidence for the four Varṇas, and treating the transfer as late. Nor can we say with Senart that the castes and classes are of independent origin. If there had been no Varṇa, caste might never have arisen; both colour and class occupation are needed for a plausible account of the rise of caste.<sup>171</sup>

Vasiṣṭha is the name of one of the most prominent priestly figures of Vedic tradition. The seventh Maṇḍala of the Rigveda is ascribed to him; this ascription is borne out by the fact that the Vasiṣṭhas<sup>1</sup> and Vasiṣṭha<sup>2</sup> are frequently mentioned in that Maṇḍala, besides being sometimes referred to elsewhere. That by the name Vasiṣṭha a definite individual is always meant is most improbable, as Oldenberg<sup>3</sup> shows; Vasiṣṭha must normally mean simply 'a Vasiṣṭha.' But it is not necessary to deny that a real Vasiṣṭha existed, for one hymn<sup>4</sup> seems to show clear traces of his authorship, and of his assistance to Sudās against the ten kings.

The most important feature of Vasiṣṭha's life was apparently <sup>4</sup> Rv. vii. 18. As to vii. 33, Oldenberg and Geldner differ. See Vedische Studien, 2, 130. But it is rather doubtful whether it can possibly be said to be as early as vii. 18, or to have any claim to be really an utterance of Vasiṣṭha.

his hostility to Viśvāmitra. The latter was certainly<sup>5</sup> at one time the Purohita ('domestic priest') of Sudās, but he seems to have been deposed from that post, to have joined Sudās' enemies, and to have taken part in the onslaught of the kings against him, for the hymn of Sudās' triumph<sup>4</sup> has clear references to the ruin Viśvāmitra brought on his allies.<sup>6</sup> Oldenberg,<sup>7</sup> however, holds that the strife of Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha is not to be found in the Rīgveda. On the other hand, Geldner<sup>8</sup> is hardly right in finding in the Rīgveda<sup>9</sup> a compressed account indicating the rivalry of Śakti, Vasiṣṭha's son, with Viśvāmitra, the acquisition by Viśvāmitra of special skill in speech, and the revenge of Viśvāmitra, who secured the death of Śakti by Sudās' servants, an account which is more fully related by Ṣaḍguruśiṣya,<sup>10</sup> which appeared in the Śātyāyanaka,<sup>11</sup> and to which reference seems to be made in the brief notices of the Taittirīya Saṃhitā<sup>12</sup> and the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>13</sup> regarding Vasiṣṭha's sons having been slain, and his overcoming the Saudāsas. But it is important to note that no mention is made in these authorities of Sudās himself being actually opposed to Vasiṣṭha, while in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>14</sup> Vasiṣṭha appears as the Purohita and consecrator of Sudās Pajjavana. Yāska<sup>15</sup> recognizes Viśvāmitra as the Purohita of Sudās; this accords with what seems to have been the fact that Viśvāmitra originally held the post. Probably, however, with the disappearance of Sudās, Viśvāmitra recovered his position, whereupon Vasiṣṭha in revenge for the murder of his sons secured in some way unspecified the defeat of the Saudāsas.<sup>16</sup>

At any rate it is hardly necessary to suppose that the enmity of the Saudāsas and Vasiṣṭhas was permanent. There is evidence<sup>17</sup> that the Bharatas had the Vasiṣṭhas as Purohitas, while other versions<sup>18</sup> regard them as Purohitas for people (prajāh) generally. It seems that the Vasiṣṭhas were pioneers in adopting the rule that Purohitas should act as Brahman priest<sup>19</sup> at the sacrifice: the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>20</sup> states that the Vasiṣṭhas were once the only priests to act as Brahmans, but that later any priest could serve as such.<sup>21</sup> A rivalry with Jamadgni and Viśvāmitra is reported in the Taittiriya Saṃhitā.<sup>22</sup> Parāśara and Śatayātu are associated with Vasiṣṭha in the Rigveda,<sup>23</sup> being apparently, as Geldner<sup>24</sup> thinks, the grandson and a son of Vasiṣṭha. According to Pischel,<sup>25</sup> in another hymn,<sup>26</sup> Vasiṣṭha appears as attempting to steal the goods of his father Varuṇa; Geldner<sup>27</sup> also shows that the Rigveda<sup>28</sup> contains a clear reference to Vasiṣṭha's being a son of Varuṇa and the nymph Urvaśi. Perhaps this explains the fact that the Vasiṣṭhas are called the Tr̥tsus in one passage

Vāko-vākya, 'dialogue,' is the name given in the Brāhmaṇas<sup>1</sup> to certain portions of the Vedic texts. In one place<sup>2</sup> the Brahmodya is said to be a dialogue; very probably in all the passages the Brahmodya is meant by this term. Geldner's

Cf. Weber, Indische Studien, I, 267 ; Eggeling, Sacred Books of the East, 44, 98, n. 3. It is certain that 'logic' is not meant, though Max Müller so renders it in his translation of the Chāndogya Upaniṣad.

Vāc, 'speech,' plays a great part in Vedic speculation, but only a few points are of other than mythological significance. Speech is in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> divided into four kinds—that of men, of animals, of birds (vayāṃsi), and of small creeping things (kṣudraṇ sarīṣam). The discrimination or making articulate of speech is ascribed to Indra by the Saṃhitās.<sup>2</sup> The 'speech' of the following musical instruments—Tūṇava, Viṇā, Dundubhi<sup>3</sup>—is mentioned, and in one Saṃhitā<sup>4</sup> also that of the axle of a chariot. The speech of the Kuru-Pāñcālas was especially renowned,<sup>5</sup> as well as that of the northern country, according to the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa,<sup>6</sup> so that men went there to study the language. On the other hand, barbarisms in speech were known, and were to be avoided.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, iii. 2, 3, 15. The difficult phrase has caused some doubt as to the sense, for uttarāhi vāg vadati Kurupāñcālātrā seems to mean 'speech in the north among the Kuru-Pāñcālas,' this version being slightly supported by the Kāṇva recension of the passage quoted by Eggeling, Sacred Books of the East, 12, xlii, n. 1. That recension, however, is not merely obscure, but it seems to couple the Kurus with the northern Mahāvṛṣas (so we must emend Mahāvṛṣeṣu), and it cannot be relied on. Eggeling's attempt to remove the difficulty by taking uttarāhi as 'higher' in tone is not satisfactory. The most probable solution is that of Weber, Indische Studien, I, 191, who takes Kurupāñcālātrā to be 'as among the Kuru-Pāñcālas,' which gives a good sense, especially when it is remembered that the northerners were probably the Uttara-Kurus in Kaśmīr, which seems to have been a home of Sanskrit (cf. Franke, Pāli und Sanskrit, 89).

<sup>7</sup> Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, iii. 2, 1, 23. 24, where the Asuras are described as saying he 'lavaḥ, perhaps for he 'rayaḥ. But the Kāṇva version is different. See Eggeling, Sacred Books of the East, 26, 31, n. 3.

One division of speech referred to* is that of the divine (daivī) and the human (mānuṣī), of which some specimens are given, such as om, the divine counterpart of tathā, and so forth. The Brahmin is said to know both;<sup>8</sup> it seems best to regard the distinction not as between Sanskrit and Apabhraṃśa, as Sāyaṇa<sup>10</sup> suggests, but as between the Sanskrit of the ritual and the hymns and that of ordinary life.

Reference is also made to Āryan<sup>11</sup> and to Brahmin<sup>12</sup> speech, by which Sanskrit, as opposed to non-Āryan tongues, seems to be meant. The Vrātyas are described as speaking the language of the initiated (dīkṣita-vāc), though not themselves initiated (a-dīkṣita), but as calling that which is easy to utter (a-durukta), difficult to utter.<sup>13</sup> This may mean that the non-Brahminical Indians were advancing more rapidly than the Brahminical tribes to Prākṛit speech, especially if it is legitimate to connect the Vrātyas with the barbarians in speech alluded to in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>8</sup> See Kāthaka Samhitā, xiv. 5; Maitrāyaṇī Samhitā, i. 11, 5 (where the words yaś ca veda vaś ca na replace the ordinary distinction of daivī and mānuṣī: perhaps vedo should be read); Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, vi. 2, 1, 34; Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, vii. 18, 13; Aitareya Āraṇyaka, i. 3, 1; a Brāhmaṇa in Nirukta, xiii. 9, etc.

Vājapeya is the name of a ceremony which, according to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> and later authorities,<sup>2</sup> is only performed by a Brahmin or a Kṣatriya. The same Brāhmaṇa<sup>3</sup> insists that this sacrifice is superior to the Rājasūya, but the consensus of other authorities<sup>4</sup> assigns to it merely the place of a preliminary to the Bṛhaspatisava in the case of a priest, and to the Rājasūya in the case of a king, while the Śatapatha<sup>5</sup> is compelled to identify the Bṛhaspatisava with the Vājapeya. The essential ceremony is a chariot race in which the sacrificer is victorious. There is evidence in the Sāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra<sup>6</sup> showing that once the festival was one which any Āryan could perform. Hillebrandt,<sup>7</sup> indeed, goes so far as to compare it with the Olympic games; but there is hardly much real ground for this: the rite seems to have been developed round a primitive habit of chariot racing, transformed into a ceremony which by sympathetic magic secures the success of the sacrificer. In fact<sup>8</sup> Eggeling seems correct in holding that the Vājapeya was a preliminary rite performed by a Brahmin prior to his formal installation as a Purohita, or by a king prior to his consecration. The Kuru Vājapeya was specially well known.<sup>9</sup>

Vāja-śravasa, 'descendant of Vājaśravas,' is the patronymic of Kuśri in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>1</sup> It is also the patronymic of the father of Naciketas in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>2</sup> where the name is apparently Uśant, though it is understood by Sāyaṇa as a participle in the sense of 'desiring.' The Vājaśravases are in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa said to have been sages.<sup>3</sup> They were Gotamas.<sup>4</sup>

Vājin in several passages of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> denotes 'steed' with reference to its swiftness and strength. In one passage<sup>2</sup> it is perhaps, as Ludwig<sup>3</sup> thinks, a proper name, that of a son of Bṛhaduktha, but this view seems forced.

Vāta-raśana, 'wind-girt,' is applied to the Munis in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and to the Ṛṣis in the Taittiriya Āraṇyaka.<sup>2</sup> Naked ascetics, such as are known throughout later Indian religious history, are evidently meant.

though without sufficient reason, to take the word as a proper name.

Vātavant is the name of a Ṛṣi in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa (xxv. 3, 6). He and Dṛti performed a certain Sattrā or sacrificial session, but by stopping at a particular time he came to grief, and his descendants, the Vātavatas, were less prosperous than the Dārteyas.

Vātsi, 'descendant of Vatsa,' is the patronymic of Sarpi in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (vi. 24, 16).

Vātsī-putra, 'son of a female descendant of Vatsa,' as the name of a teacher mentioned in the last Vaṃśa (list of teachers) of the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad as a pupil of Pārāśarīputra according to the Kāṇva recension (vi, 5, 2), as a pupil of Bhāradvājīputra according to the Mādhyamīdina (vi. 4, 31).

Vātsī-Māṇḍavī-putra is the name of a teacher, a pupil of Pārāśarīputra, according to the last Vaṃśa (list of teachers) in the Mādhyamīdina recension of the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (vi. 4, 30).

Vātsya, 'descendant of Vatsa,' is the name of one or more teachers. One is mentioned in the Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka,<sup>1</sup> where the Aitareya Āraṇyaka<sup>2</sup> in the parallel passage has Bādhva. Others occur in the Vaṃśas (lists of teachers) of the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad as pupils of Kuśri,<sup>3</sup> Śaṇḍilya,<sup>4</sup> or another Vātsya,<sup>5</sup> while a Vātsya is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>6</sup>

Vāma-deva is credited<sup>1</sup> by tradition with the authorship of the fourth Maṇḍala of the Rigveda, and he is once mentioned in that Maṇḍala.<sup>2</sup> He is, moreover, credited with the authorship of the fourth hymn of the Maṇḍala by the Yajurveda Saṃhitās.<sup>3</sup> He there appears as a son of Gotama, while in one hymn of the fourth Maṇḍala of the Rigveda<sup>4</sup> Gotama is mentioned as the father of the singer, and in another<sup>5</sup> the Gotamas occur as praising Indra. In the Bṛhaddevatā<sup>6</sup> two absurd legends are narrated of Vāmadeva. One describes Indra as revealing himself in the form of an eagle to the seer as he cooked the entrails of a dog; the other tells of his successful conflict with Indra, whom he sold among the seers. Vāraki, 'descendant of Varaka,' is the patronymic of Kāṃsa in the Jaiminiya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa (iii. 41, 1).

Vāraṇa in two passages of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> is taken by Roth<sup>2</sup> as an adjective with Mṛga, meaning 'wild beast.' But the sense intended must have been 'elephant,' the usual sense of Vāraṇa in the classical literature. Probably the feminine Vāraṇī in the Atharvaveda<sup>3</sup> likewise denotes a 'female elephant.'

Vāsas is the most usual word in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later<sup>2</sup> for 'clothing.' Clothes were often woven of sheep's wool (cf. Ūrṇā); the god Pūṣan is called a 'weaver of garments' (vāso-vāya)<sup>3</sup> because of his connexion with the fashioning of forms. The garments worn were often embroidered (cf. Peśas), and the Maruts are described as wearing mantles adorned with gold.<sup>4</sup> When the 'giver of garments' (vāso-dā)<sup>5</sup> is mentioned along with the giver of horses and gold, ornamental garments are probably meant. There are several references in the Rigveda<sup>6</sup> to the Indians' love of ornament, which is attested by Megasthenes for his day.<sup>7</sup> The Rigveda also presents epithets like su-vasana<sup>8</sup> and su-rabhi,<sup>9</sup> implying that garments were becoming or well-fitting.

The Vedic Indian seems often to have worn three garments—an undergarment (cf. Nīvi),<sup>10</sup> a garment,<sup>11</sup> and an overgarment (cf. Adhivāsa),<sup>12</sup> which was presumably a mantle, and for which the names Atka and Drāpi also seem to be used. This accords with the description of the sacrificial garments given in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>13</sup> which comprise a Tārpya, perhaps a 'silken undergarment'; secondly, a garment of undyed wool, and then a mantle, while the ends of the turban, after being tied behind the neck, are brought forward and tucked away in front. The last point would hardly accord with the usual practice in ordinary life, but seems to be a special sacrificial ritual act. A similar sort of garments in the case of women appears to be alluded to in the Atharvaveda<sup>14</sup> and the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>15</sup> There is nothing to show exactly what differences there were between male and female costume, nor what was exactly the nature of the clothes in either case.

It is important to note that the Vedic Indian evidently assumed that all civilized persons other than inspired Munis would wear clothing of some sort.<sup>16</sup>

Vidatha is a word of obscure sense, confined mainly to the Rigveda. According to Roth,<sup>1</sup> the sense is primarily 'order,' then the concrete body which gives orders, then 'assembly' for secular<sup>2</sup> or religious ends,<sup>3</sup> or for war.<sup>4</sup> Oldenberg<sup>5</sup> once thought that the main idea is 'ordinance' (from vi-dhā, 'dispose,' 'ordain'), and thence 'sacrifice.' Ludwig<sup>6</sup> thinks that the root idea is an 'assembly,' especially of the Maghavan and the Brahmins. Geldner<sup>7</sup> considers that the word primarily means 'knowledge,' 'wisdom,' 'priestly lore,' then 'sacrifice' and 'spiritual authority.' Bloomfield,<sup>8</sup> on the other hand, insists that Vidatha refers to the 'house'<sup>9</sup> in the first place (from vid, 'acquire'), and then to the 'sacrifice,' as connected with the house; this interpretation, at any rate, appears to suit all the passages. The term vidathya, once<sup>10</sup> applied to the king (samrāt), might seem to be against this view, but it may refer to his being 'rich in homesteads'; and the connexion of the woman with the Vidatha, as opposed to Videgha is the name of a man, Māthava, in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>1</sup> It is legitimate to assume<sup>2</sup> that it is a name given to him as king of the Videghas who are the later Videhas.

Videha is the name of a people who are not mentioned before the Brāhmaṇa period. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> the legend of Videgha Māthava preserves clearly a tradition that in Videha culture came from the Brahmins of the West, and that Kosala was brahminized before Videha. The Videhas, however, derived some fame later from the culture of their king Janaka, who figures in the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad<sup>2</sup> as one of the leading patrons of the Brahman doctrine. In the Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad<sup>3</sup> the Videhas are joined with the Kāśis; in the list of peoples in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>4</sup> the Videhas are passed over, probably because, with Kosala and Kāśi, they are included in the term Prācyas, 'easterners.' Again, in the Sāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra<sup>5</sup> it is recorded that the Kāśi, Kosala, and Videha kingdoms had each the one Purohita, Jala Jātūkarnya; and in another passage of the same text<sup>6</sup> the connexion between the Videha king, Para Ātñāra, and the Kosala king, Hiranya-nābha, is explained, while the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>7</sup> speaks of Para Ātñāra as the Kosala king, descendant of Hiranyanābha.

Another king of Videha was Namī Sāpya, mentioned in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa.<sup>8</sup> In the Saṃhitās of the Yajurveda<sup>9</sup> 'cows of Videha' seem to be alluded to, though the commentator on the Taittirīya Saṃhitā merely takes the adjective vaidehī as 'having a splendid body' (viśiṣṭa-deha-sambandhīni), and the point of a place name in the expression is not very obvious. The Videhas also occur in the Baudhāyana Śrauta Sūtra<sup>10</sup> in Brāhmaṇa-like passages.

The boundary of Kosala and Videha was the Sadānirā,

Vidhavā denotes 'widow' as the 'desolate one,' from the root vidh, 'be bereft.' The masculine vidhava is conjectured by Roth<sup>1</sup> in a difficult passage of the Rigveda,<sup>2</sup> where the received text presents the apparent false concord vidhantaṃ vidhavām, in which he sees a metrical lengthening for vidhavam, 'the sacrificing widower.' Ludwig in his version takes vidhantaṃ as equivalent to a feminine, while Delbrück<sup>3</sup> prefers 'the worshipper and the widow.' Possibly 'the widower and the widow' may be meant; but we know nothing of the mythological allusion in question, the feat being one of those attributed to the Aśvins, and the natural reference to Ghoṣā as 'husbandless' being rendered unlikely because their feat in regard to her has already been mentioned a few verses before in the same hymn.<sup>4</sup> The word Vidhavā is not of common occurrence.<sup>5</sup>

1. Vipāścit Dr̥ḍha-jayanta Lauhitya ('descendant of Lohita') is mentioned in the Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa (iii. 42, 1) as the pupil of Dakṣa Jayanta Lauhitya.

2. Vipāścit Śakuni-mitra Pārāśarya ('descendant of Parāśara') is the name of a teacher, pupil of Aṣāḍha Uttara Pārāśarya, in a Vaṃśa (list of teachers) of the Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa (iii. 41, 1).

Vi-pās ('fetterless') is the name of a river mentioned twice in the R̥gveda.<sup>1</sup> It is the modern Beās in the Panjab, the Hyphasis, Hypanis or Bipasis of the Greeks. Its small importance for the Vedic Indians is indicated by the fact that it is never mentioned in the earlier Vedic literature except in two hymns of the R̥gveda. The Nirukta<sup>2</sup> preserves the notice that its earlier name was Uruñjirā, while the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>3</sup> places in the middle of it the Vasiṣṭha-śilāḥ. Pāṇini<sup>4</sup> mentions the name, which otherwise in post-Vedic literature appears as Vipāsā. This river has changed its course considerably since ancient times.<sup>5</sup> in connexion with the Śatudrī in ii. 24; ix. 36.

Vipṛthu in the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra (xiv. 72, 3) is apparently equivalent to the Vipatha, 'rough cart,' of other texts. It is probably a mere blunder.

Vipra seems to mean 'inspired singer' (from vip, 'quiver') in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later.<sup>2</sup> More especially in the later texts<sup>3</sup> it denotes a 'learned Brahmin.' In the epic style it comes to mean no more than 'Brahmin.'

Viś is an expression of somewhat doubtful significance. In many passages of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> the sense of 'settlement' or 'dwelling' is adequate and probable, since the root viś means to 'enter' or 'settle.' In other passages, where the Viśaḥ stand in relation to a prince, the term must mean 'subject';<sup>2</sup> so, for example, when the people of Ṭṛṇaskanda<sup>3</sup> or of the Ṭṛtsus are mentioned.<sup>4</sup> Again, in some passages<sup>5</sup> the general sense of 'people' is adequate; as when the Rigveda speaks of the 'Āryan people,'<sup>6</sup> or the 'divine people,'<sup>7</sup> or the 'Dāsa people,' and so on.<sup>8</sup>

Sometimes,<sup>9</sup> however, the Viś appear in a more special sense as a subdivision of the Jana or whole people. This is, however, not common, for in most passages one or other of the senses given above is quite possible. Moreover, it is very difficult to decide whether the Viś as a subdivision of the Jana is to be considered as being a local subdivision (canton) or a blood kinship equivalent to a clan in the large sense of the word, while the relation of the Viś to the Grāma or to the Gotra is quite uncertain. In one passage of the Atharvaveda<sup>10</sup> the Viśaḥ are mentioned along with the sabandhavaḥ or relatives, but no definite conclusion can be drawn from that fact. Nor does the analogy of the Roman curia or the Greek φύλη throw much light, as these institutions are themselves of obscure character, and the parallelism need not be cogent. It is, at any rate, possible that the Viś may in some cases have been no more than a Gotra or clan, or different clans may sometimes have made up a Viś, while Grāma is more definitely, perhaps, a local designation. But the Vedic evidence is quite inconclusive.<sup>11</sup>

Cf. Viśpati.

In the later period the sense of Viś is definitely restricted in some cases<sup>12</sup> to denote the third of the classes of the Vedic polity, the people or clansmen as opposed to the nobles (Kṣātra, Kṣatriya) and the priests (Brahman, Brāhmaṇa). For the position of this class, see Vaiśya.

<sup>11</sup> The Viś may have been originally a clan settled in one place: there is no passage where 'Gotra' would not probably make sense; Rv. ii. 26, 3, cannot be pressed unduly to distinguish iunman and Viś. Compare the phrase used of the Maruts sardhaṇ sardham, vrātaṇ vrātam, gaṇaṇ gaṇam, in Rv. v. 53, 11, where no precise sense can fairly be attributed to the words, though Zimmer sees in them a threefold division of the host corresponding to Jana, Viś, and Grāma. The rendering 'Gau' has therefore little foundation.

<sup>12</sup> Perhaps to this sense belong the numerous passages in the Brāhmaṇas and later Saṃhitās referring to strife between the Viś and the Kṣātra, the clansmen and the chiefs, or the peasantry and the nobles—e.g., Taittirīya Saṃhitā, ii. 2, 11, 2; Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā, ii. 1, 9; iii. 3, 10; Kāthaka Saṃhitā, xix. 9 and often. Vi-śara is found as the name of a disease, perhaps 'tearing pains,' in the Atharvaveda.<sup>1</sup> Zimmer<sup>2</sup> thinks that the pains in the limbs attendant on fever (Takman) are alluded to. Viś-pati is a word of somewhat uncertain signification, reflecting in this respect the nature of Viś. Zimmer holds that in its strict sense it denotes the head of a canton, but he admits that there is no passage requiring this sense, the only one quoted by him<sup>2</sup> being certainly indecisive. In the great majority of passages the word simply means the 'lord of the dwelling,' whether used of a man or of the god Agni as the householder par excellence, or possibly as the fire of the Sabhā or assembly house of the people. This sense suits even the passage of the Rigveda<sup>4</sup> in which the Viśpati, as well as the father and the mother of a maiden,<sup>5</sup> are to be lulled to sleep in order to allow her lover to approach her, for the household may well be deemed to have been a joint family, in which the Viśpati could easily be different from the father of the girl—e.g., a grandfather or uncle. In other passages<sup>6</sup> the Viśpati is the king as 'lord of the subject-people' (viśām), though here Zimmer<sup>7</sup> thinks reference is made to the election of a king.<sup>8</sup> Or again,<sup>7</sup> the Viśpati is the chief of the Viś, probably in the sense of 'subjects.'

Geldner, Vedische Studien, 2, 55 et seq., accepts the view of the Brhaddevatā, vi. 11 et seq. (where see Macdonell's note), that the hymn refers to Vasiṣṭha's approaching a house as a thief! The interpretation does not affect the sense of Viśpati, which here is clearly not the title of a cantonal chief. Viś is sometimes equivalent to Sajāta; cf. Taittirīya Saṃhitā, ii. 1, 3, 2, 3.

<sup>6</sup> Av. iii. 4, 1; iv. 22, 3. Perhaps Rv. iii. 13, 5, is so to be taken; cf. vii. 39, 2. Cf. Weber, Indische Studien, 18, 22.

There he calls himself the son of Kuśika, and seems unquestionably to be the helper of the Bharatas, whom he mentions. The tribe, engaged in a raid, apparently came to the rivers from the east.<sup>4</sup> Anxious to cross them, they

Litteratur und Geschichte des Weda, 90, he assumes that the Bharatas were different from the Tṛtsus, and that they came under Viśvāmitra from the West, but were defeated (see Rv. vii. 33, 6). But see Weber, Episches im vedischen Ritual, 34, n. 1; Pischel, Vedische Studien, 2, 136. Bloomfield, Journal of the American Oriental Society, 16, 41, 42, still defends Roth's view.

found them in high flood, but Viśvāmitra by prayer induced the waters to subside. The same feat appears to be referred to in another passage of the same book of the Rigveda.<sup>5</sup> Curiously enough, Sāyaṇa<sup>6</sup> quite misunderstands the situation: according to him, Viśvāmitra having obtained wealth by the exercise of his office, went off with it to the rivers, pursued by others. Yāska's<sup>7</sup> version of the tale merely seems to mean that the king paid Viśvāmitra to act as his Purohita, or domestic priest. For the relations of Viśvāmitra to Vasiṣṭha connected with their service of Sudās, see Vasiṣṭha.

The Viśvāmitras are mentioned in several other passages of the Rigveda,<sup>8</sup> and are also designated as a family by the term Kuśikas.<sup>9</sup>

In the later literature Viśvāmitra becomes, like Vasiṣṭha, a mythical sage, usually<sup>10</sup> mentioned in connection with Jamadagni; he was Hotṛ priest at the sacrifice of Śunaḥśepa, whom he adopted, and to whom he gave the name of Devarāta.<sup>11</sup> He was a protégé of Indra, with whom he had an interview according to the Rigveda Āraṇyakas.<sup>12</sup> He is also often mentioned as a Ṛṣi.<sup>13</sup>

In the Epic<sup>14</sup> Viśvāmitra is represented as a king, who becomes a Brahmin. There is no trace of his kingship in the Rigveda, but the Nirukta<sup>15</sup> calls his father, Kuśika, a king; the

Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>16</sup> refers to Śunaḥśepa as succeeding to the lordship of the Jahnus, as well as the 'divine lore' (daiva veda) of the Gāthins; and the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>17</sup> mentions Viśvāmitra as a king. But there is no real trace of this kingship of Viśvāmitra: it may probably be dismissed as a mere legend, with no more foundation at most than that Viśvāmitra was of a family which once had been royal. But even this is doubtful.

<sup>16</sup> vii. 18, 9. But the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra, xv. 27, has a completely different version, which Weber, Episches in vedischen Ritual, 16, n. 3, prefers, and which omits all allusion to the 'lordship' of the Jahnus. This shows how little stress can be laid on this late tradition.

Viṣa in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later<sup>2</sup> regularly denotes 'poison' as an antidote, for which the Atharvaveda supplies spells.<sup>3</sup>

horn is meant. See Whitney, Translation of the Atharvaveda, 94.

Viṣāṇakā is the name of a plant in the Atharvaveda.<sup>1</sup> Bloomfield,<sup>2</sup> however, thinks that the word may merely mean 'horn.' It is used as a remedy against the disease Vāṭikāra.<sup>3</sup> That disease is of doubtful character : Zimmer<sup>4</sup> thinks that it is one 'caused by wounds,' comparing the adjective a-vāta, 'uninjured,' in the Rigveda,<sup>5</sup> but Bloomfield<sup>6</sup> shows that 'wind' in the body is meant as causing the disease.

Viṣānin occurs once in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> as the name of a tribe in the list of the enemies of the Trtsus, not as Roth<sup>2</sup> thought, of their allies. The word seems to mean 'having horns,' but in what sense is unknown; perhaps their helmets were horn-shaped or ornamented with horns. They may, like their allies, the Alinas, Bhalānas, Śivas, and Pakthas, be reckoned as belonging to the tribes of the north-west.

1. Viṣūvant denotes in the Atharvaveda<sup>1</sup> and later<sup>2</sup> the middle day in the Sattrā or sacrificial session of a year's duration. Tilak<sup>3</sup> argues that the Viṣūvant literally means the day when night and daylight are equal—i.e., the equinoctial day—and that this is the true sense of the word. Viṣūcikā is the name of a disease mentioned in the Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā<sup>1</sup> as a result of over-indulgence in Soma drinking. It seems clearly to be 'dysentery,' or, as Wise calls it, 'sporadic cholera.' The term apparently means 'causing evacuations in both directions.'

Viṣṭhā-vrājīn is a word of doubtful significance in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>1</sup> According to Sāyaṇa, it means 'remaining in one and the same place'; if this is right, the rendering of the Vṛkṣya in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (i. 1, 1, 10) denotes the 'fruit of a tree.'

Vṛcayā is referred to once in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> as the spouse given by the Aśvins to Kakṣivant.

<sup>1</sup> i. 51, 3. Cf. Pischel, Vedische Studien, I, 3, 203, who distinguishes two Kakṣivants, but without sufficient reason, since i. 116, 17, must clearly refer to Vṛcayā.

Vṛcivant is the name of a tribe referred to once in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> where it is clearly stated that the Sṛñjaya king, Daivavāta, conquered the Turvaśa king and the Vṛcivants. Zimmer<sup>2</sup> thinks that the Vṛcivants and the Turvaśa people should be identified, but this is both unnecessary and improbable; it is adequate to assume that they were allied against<sup>3</sup> the Sṛñjayas. The Vṛcivants appear again only in the strange legend in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa,<sup>4</sup> according to which the Jahnuś and the Vṛcivants contended for sovereignty, Viśvā-mitra, the Jahnu king, winning it by his knowledge of a certain rite. Vṛjana, according to Roth,<sup>1</sup> denotes in several passages of the Rīgveda<sup>2</sup> the 'settlement' or 'village,' the German 'Mark' and its inhabitants. Zimmer,<sup>3</sup> accepting this view, sees in Vṛjana the 'secure abode' (kṣiti dhruvā) where the clan lives,<sup>4</sup> the clan itself as a village community (like Grāma), and the clan in war.<sup>5</sup> Geldner,<sup>6</sup> on the other hand, takes the literal sense of Vṛjana to be 'net,' developing all the other senses from that idea, but the traditional view seems more natural.

Vṛtra-ghna occurs in a passage of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>1</sup> where in a Gāthā reciting the prowess of Bharata it is said that he bound horses on the Yamunā (Jumna) and Gaṅgā (Ganges) Vṛtraghne, which Sāyaṇa renders 'at Vṛtraghna,' as the name of a place. Roth,<sup>2</sup> however, seems right in interpreting the form as a dative, 'for the slayer of Vṛtra'—i.e., Indra.

Vṛddha-dyumna Ābhipratāriṇa ('descendant of Abhipratārin') is the name of a prince (vājanya) in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (iii. 48, 9), where his priest, Śucivṛkṣa Gaupalāyana, is praised. In the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra (xv, 16, 10-13), on the contrary, he is said to have erred in the sacrifice, when a Brahmin prophesied that the result would be the expulsion of the Kurus from Kurukṣetra, an event which actually came to pass.

Vṛddha-vāsinī in the Nirukta (v. 21) denotes the 'female jackal.'

2. Vṛṣa Jāna ('descendant of Jana') is the name of a famous Purohita, who was unfortunate enough, while with his royal master, Tryarūṇa, to see a boy killed by the chariot which the king drove too fast. He thereupon recalled the boy to life. The story is told briefly in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa,<sup>1</sup> the Śaṭyāyanaka,<sup>2</sup> the Tāṇḍaka,<sup>3</sup> was also narrated in the Bhāllavi Brāhmaṇa,<sup>4</sup> and is preserved in the Bṛhaddevatā.<sup>5</sup> Sieg<sup>6</sup> has endeavoured to trace the story in part in the Rigveda,<sup>7</sup> but there is a consensus of opinion<sup>8</sup> against the correctness of such a view.

Veṇu in the Atharvaveda<sup>1</sup> and later<sup>2</sup> denotes a 'reed' of bamboo. It is described in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā<sup>3</sup> as 'hollow' (su-ṣira). In the Rigveda<sup>4</sup> it occurs only in a Vālakhilya hymn in a Dānastuti ('praise of gifts'), where Roth<sup>5</sup> thinks that 'flutes of reed' are meant, a sense which Veṇu has in the later texts. Vetasu is a name occurring in the singular in two passages of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and once in the plural.<sup>2</sup> It seems that he was defeated by Indra, but there is no reason to assume that he was a demon. Vaikarṇa occurs but once in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> in the description of the Dāśarājña, where Sudās is stated to have overthrown the twenty-one tribes (janān) of the kings or folk of the two Vaikarṇas. Zimmer<sup>2</sup> conjectures that they were a joint people, the Kuru-Krivis: this is quite possible, and even probable. Vikarṇa as the name of a people is found in the Mahābhārata,<sup>3</sup> and a lexicographer<sup>4</sup> places the Vikarṇas in Kaśmīr, a reminiscence probably of a real settlement of the Kurus in that country. Vaira<sup>1</sup> and Vaira-deya<sup>2</sup> seem to have in the later Saṃhitās and the Brāhmaṇas the definite and technical sense of 'wergeld,' the money to be paid for killing a man as a compensation to his relatives. This view is borne out by the Sūtras of Āpastamba<sup>3</sup> and Baudhāyana.<sup>4</sup> Both prescribe the scale of 1,000 cows for a Kṣatriya,<sup>5</sup> 100 for a Vaiśya, 10 for a Śūdra, and a bull over and above in each case. Āpastamba leaves the destination of the payment vague, but Baudhāyana assigns it to the king. It is reasonable to suppose that the cows were intended for the relations, and the bull was a present to the king for his intervention to induce the injured relatives to abandon the demand for the life of the offender. The Āpastamba Sūtra<sup>6</sup> allows the same scale of wergeld for women, but the Gautama Sūtra<sup>7</sup> puts them on a level with men of the Śūdra caste only, except in one special case. The payment is made for the purpose of vaira-yātana or vaira-niryātana, 'requital of enmity,' 'expiation.'

The Rigveda<sup>8</sup> preserves, also, the important notice that a man's wergeld was a hundred (cows), for it contains the epithet śata-dāya, 'one whose wergeld is a hundred.' No doubt the values varied, but in the case of Śunaḥśepa the amount is a hundred (cows) in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.<sup>9</sup> In the Yajurveda Saṃhitās<sup>10</sup> śata-dāya again appears.

Vaiśya denotes a man, not so much of the people, as of the subject class, distinct from the ruling noble (Kṣatriya) and the Brāhmaṇa, the higher strata of the Āryan community on the one side, and from the aboriginal Śūdra on the other. The name is first found in the Puruṣa-sūkta ('hymn of man') in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> and then frequently from the Atharvaveda<sup>2</sup> onwards,<sup>3</sup> sometimes in the form of Viśya.<sup>4</sup>

The Vaiśya plays singularly little part in Vedic literature, which has much to say of Kṣatriya and Brahmin. His characteristics are admirably summed up in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>5</sup> in the adjectives anyasya bali-kṛt, 'tributary to another'; anyasyādyā, 'to be lived upon by another'; and yathākāma-jyeyah, 'to be oppressed at will.' He was unquestionably taxed by the king (Rājan), who no doubt assigned to his retinue the right of support by the people, so that the Kṣatriyas grew more and more to depend on the services rendered to them by the Vaiśyas. But the Vaiśya was not a slave: he could not be killed by the king or anyone else without the slayer incurring risk and the payment of a wergeld (Vaira), which even in the Brahmin books extends to 100 cows for a Vaiśya. Moreover, though the Vaiśya could be expelled by the king at pleasure, he cannot be said to have been without property in his land. Hopkins<sup>6</sup> thinks it is absurd to suppose that he could really be a landowner when he was subject to removal at will, but this is to ignore the fact that normally the king could not remove the landowner, and that kings were ultimately dependent on the people, as the tales of exiled kings show.

On the other hand, Hopkins<sup>7</sup> is clearly right in holding that the Vaiśya was really an agriculturist, and that Vedic society was not merely a landholding aristocracy, superimposed upon an agricultural aboriginal stock, as Baden Powell<sup>8</sup> urged. Without ignoring the possibility that the Dravidians were agriculturists, there is no reason to deny that the Āryans were so likewise, and the goad of the plougher was the mark of a Vaiśya in life<sup>9</sup> and in death.<sup>10</sup> It would be absurd to suppose that the Āryan Vaiśyas did not engage in industry and commerce (cf. Paṇi, Vaṇij), but pastoral pursuits and agriculture must have been their normal occupations.

In war the Vaiśyas must have formed the bulk of the force under the Kṣatriya leaders (see Kṣatriya). But like the Homeric commoners, the Vaiśyas may well have done little of the serious fighting, being probably ill-provided with either body armour or offensive weapons.

That the Vaiśyas were engaged in the intellectual life of the day is unlikely; nor is there any tradition, corresponding to that regarding the Kṣatriyas, of their having taken part in the evolution of the doctrine of Brahman, the great philosophic achievement of the age. The aim of the Vaiśya's ambition was, according to the Taittirīya Saṃhitā,<sup>11</sup> to become a Grāmaṇī, or village headman, a post probably conferred by the king on wealthy Vaiśyas, of whom no doubt there were many. It is impossible to say if in Vedic times a Vaiśya could attain to nobility or become a Brahmin. No instance can safely be quoted in support of such a view,<sup>12</sup> though such changes of status may have taken place (see Kṣatriya and Varṇa).

It is denied by Fick<sup>13</sup> that the Vaiśyas were ever a caste, and the denial is certainly based on good grounds if it is held that a caste means a body within which marriage is essential, and which follows a hereditary occupation (cf. Varṇa). But it would be wrong<sup>14</sup> to suppose that the term Vaiśya was merely applied by theorists to the people who were not nobles or priests. It must have been an early appellation of a definite class which was separate from the other classes, and properly to be compared with them. Moreover, though there were differences among Vaiśyas, there were equally differences among Kṣatriyas and Brāhmaṇas, and it is impossible to deny Vyāghra, 'tiger,' is never found in the Rigveda, but frequently occurs in the Atharvaveda,<sup>1</sup> as well as the lion. This fact is legitimately regarded as an indication that the Atharvaveda belongs to a period when the Vedic Indian had approached and entered the territory of Bengal. Later,<sup>2</sup> also, mention of the tiger is quite common. The Taittirīya Saṃhitā<sup>3</sup> preserves a reference to the danger of waking a sleeping tiger. The destructive character of the animal is often alluded to,<sup>4</sup> the man-eater (puruṣād)<sup>5</sup> being also mentioned. Like the lion, the tiger passes as a symbol of strength.<sup>6</sup> This idea is illustrated by the fact that the king at the Rājasūya ('royal consecration') steps<sup>7</sup> on a tiger's skin to win himself the strength of the animal. Vyādhi, 'disease,' occurs several times in Vedic literature.<sup>1</sup> The specific diseases are dealt with under the separate names, but the Vedic texts also mention innumerable bodily defects. The list of victims<sup>2</sup> at the Puruṣamedha ('human sacrifice') includes a 'dwarf' (vāmana, kubja), a 'bald' person (khalati),<sup>3</sup> a 'blind' man (andha),<sup>4</sup> a 'deaf' man (badhira),<sup>5</sup> a 'dumb' man (mūka),<sup>6</sup> a 'fat' man (pīvan), a 'leper' (siddhimala, kilāsa),<sup>7</sup> a 'yellow-eyed' man (haryakṣa), a 'tawny-eyed' man (piṅgākṣa), a 'cripple' (pīṭha-sarpiṇ), a 'lame' man (srāma), a 'sleepless' man (jāgarana), a 'sleepy' man (svapana), one<sup>8</sup> 'too tall' (ati-dīrgha), one 'too short' (ati-hrasva), one 'too stout' (ati-sthūla or aty-amsala), one 'too thin' (ati-kṛśa), one 'too white' (ati-śukla), one 'too dark' (ati-kṛṣṇa), one 'too bald' (ati-kulva), and one 'too hairy' (ati-lomaśa).

Vra, according to Roth,<sup>1</sup> means 'troop' in the Rigveda<sup>2</sup> and the Atharvaveda.<sup>3</sup> Zimmer<sup>4</sup> sees in the word (in the feminine form of vrā) a designation in one passage of the village host which formed part of the Viś, and was composed of relations (su-bandhu). On the other hand, Pischel<sup>5</sup> thinks that in all the passages Vrā means 'female,' used either of animals<sup>6</sup> or of

Vraja denotes in the first instance, in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> the place to which the cattle resort (from vraj, 'go'), the 'feeding ground' to which the milk-giving animals go out<sup>2</sup> in the morning from the village (Grāma), while the others stay in it all day and night.<sup>3</sup> Secondly it denotes the 'herd'<sup>4</sup> itself. This is Geldner's view,<sup>5</sup> which seems clearly better than that of Roth<sup>6</sup> who regards Vraja as primarily the 'enclosure' (from vri), and only thence the 'herd'; for the Vraja does not normally mean an 'enclosure' at all: the Vedic cattle were not stall-fed as a general rule. In some passages, however, 'pen,'<sup>7</sup> in others 'stall,'<sup>8</sup> is certainly meant. The word is often used in the myth of the robbing of the kine.<sup>9</sup> It occasionally denotes a 'cistern.'<sup>10</sup>

Vrāja-pati is found in one passage of the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> where it is said that comrades attend Indra, as the Kulapas the Vrāja-pati, when he goes about. Zimmer<sup>2</sup> thinks that this refers to the heads of families being subordinate in war to the village headman (Grāmaṇī), but Whitney<sup>3</sup> seems to be right in seeing merely the chieftain surrounded by the leading men, the family heads, not necessarily merely a village headman. Vrāta is found in several passages of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later<sup>2</sup> in the sense of 'troop.' In one passage of the Rigveda<sup>3</sup> the troops of the Maruts are referred to by three different terms—śardha, vrāta, and gaṇa. From this fact Zimmer<sup>4</sup> has deduced that a Vedic host fought according to clan (Viś), village (Grāma), and family, but this conclusion is hardly warranted, there being nothing to show that there is any intention to present a distinct series of divisions. It is not probable that the word ever has the technical sense of 'guild,' as Roth<sup>5</sup> thinks. Cf. Vrātapati.

Vrāta-pati, 'lord of troops,' is an epithet included in the names of Rudra in the Yajurveda Saṃhitās,<sup>1</sup> along with the epithet Gaṇa-pati, 'lord of groups.' The exact sense is quite uncertain, but the term may allude to the chief of a band of robbers, as Zimmer<sup>2</sup> thinks.

Vrātya is included in the list of victims at the Puruṣamedha ('human sacrifice') in the Yajurveda,<sup>1</sup> where, however, no further explanation of the name is given. Fuller information is furnished by the Atharvaveda,<sup>2</sup> the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa,<sup>3</sup> and the Sūtras,<sup>4</sup> which describe at length a certain rite intended for the use of Vrātyas. According to the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, there are four different kinds of 'outcasts'—viz., the hīna, who are merely described as 'depressed'; those who have become outcasts for some sin (nindita); those who become outcasts at an early age, apparently by living among outcasts; and those old men who, being impotent (sama-nīcamedhva), have gone to live with outcasts. The last three categories are by no means of the same importance as the first. The motive of the fourth is hard to understand: according to Rājārām Rām-krishṇa Bhāgavat,<sup>5</sup> they were men who had enfeebled their constitutions by undue intercourse with women in the lands of the outcasts, and returned home in a debilitated state. But this is not stated in the text.

It seems probable that the really important Vrātyas were those referred to as hīna, and that the other classes were only subsidiary. According to Rājārām,<sup>6</sup> there were two categories of the first class: (a) The depressed (hīna), who were non-Āryan; and (b) degraded Āryans (gara-gir). This, however, is a mere guess, and devoid of probability. There seems to have been but one class of Vrātyas. That they were non-Āryan is not probable, for it is expressly said<sup>7</sup> that, though unconsecrated, they spoke the tongue of the consecrated: they were thus apparently Āryans. This view is confirmed by the statement that 'they call what is easy of utterance, difficult to utter': probable they had already a somewhat Prakritic form of speech (cf. Vāc). The Sūtras mention their Arhants ('saints') and Yaudhas ('warriors'), corresponding to the Brahminical Brāhmaṇa and Kṣatriya.

Other particulars accord with the view that they were Āryans outside the sphere of Brahmin culture. Thus they are said<sup>8</sup> not to practise agriculture or commerce (an allusion to a nomadic life), nor to observe the rules of Brahmacarya—i.e., the principle regulating the Brahminic order of life. They were also allowed to become members of the Brahminical community by performance of the ritual prescribed, which would hardly be so natural in the case of non-Āryans.

Some details are given of the life and dress of the Vrātyas. Their principles were opposed to those of the Brahmins: they beat those unworthy of correction.<sup>9</sup> Their leader (Gṛhapati) or householder wore a turban (Uṣṇīṣa), carried a whip (Pratoda), a kind of bow (Jyāhroḍa), was clothed in a black (kṛṣṇaśa) garment and two skins (Ajina), black and white (kṛṣṇa-valakṣa), and owned a rough wagon (Vipatha) covered with planks (phalakāstīrṇa). The others,<sup>10</sup> subordinate to the leader, had garments with fringes of red (valūkāntāni dāmatīṣāṇi), two fringes on each, skins folded double (dviṣaṃhitāny ajināni), and sandals (Upānah). The leader wore also an ornament (Niṣka) of silver, which Rājārām<sup>11</sup> converts into a silver coinage. The Vrātyas, on becoming consecrated, were expected to hand over their goods to the priest. Many other details are given in the Sūtras (e.g., that the shoes or sandals were of variegated black hue and pointed), but these are not authenticated by the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa.

The locality in which the Vrātyas lived cannot be stated with certainty, but their nomad life<sup>12</sup> suggests the western tribes beyond the Sarasvatī. But they may equally well have been in the east: this possibility is so far supported by the fact that the Sūtras make the Brahmin receiving the gift of the Vrātya's outfit an inhabitant of Magadha. The Atharvaveda<sup>13</sup> does not help, for it treats the Vrātya in so mystical a way that he is represented as being in all the quarters. Indeed, Roth<sup>14</sup> believed that it was here not a case of the Vrātya of the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa at all, but of a glorification of the Vrātya as the type of the pious vagrant or wandering religious mendicant (Parivrajaka). This view is clearly wrong, as the occurrence of the words uṣṇīṣa, vipatha, and pratoda shows. It is probable that the 15th Book of the Atharvaveda, which deals with the Vrātya, and is of a mystical character, exalts the converted Vrātya as a type of the perfect Brahmacārin, and, in so far, of the divinity.<sup>15</sup>

Vrīhi, 'rice,' is never mentioned in the Rīgveda,<sup>1</sup> but is frequently alluded to in the Atharvaveda<sup>2</sup> and later.<sup>3</sup> Rice seems to be indigenous in the south-east of India:<sup>4</sup> this fact accounts well for the absence of any mention of it in the Rīgveda. Black and white rice is contrasted in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā,<sup>5</sup> where also<sup>6</sup> the distinctions of dark, swift-growing (āśu), and large rice (mahā-vrīhi) are found. Probably the swift-growing variety is that later known as ṣaṣṭika, 'ripening in sixty days.' Vrīhi and Yava, 'barley,' are normally conjoined in the texts.<sup>7</sup> Cf. Plāśuka.

<sup>1</sup> To take dhānya bīja in Rv. v. 53, 13, as 'rice seeds' is unnecessary and very improbable, nor is there better reason to see in dhānya rasa in Av. ii. 26, 5, a 'rice drink.'

The word seems to mean the 'smoke of (burning) cow-dung,' or else the 'smoke (rising) from (fresh) cow-dung': it may well be, as Weber<sup>2</sup> thinks, that this was deemed to be significant of the weather. Bloomfield,<sup>3</sup> however, considers that the word is to be rendered as 'weather prophet,' that is, one who foretells the weather by means of the smoke of a fire. Whitney<sup>4</sup> objects to this view with reason. It is not at all improbable that, as Roth<sup>5</sup> believed, an asterism of some sort is meant, probably the 'milky way.'

Śakṛt,<sup>1</sup> Śakan,<sup>2</sup> denotes 'dung' in the Rigveda and later. It is clear that the value of manure was early appreciated (see Karīṣa). For the use of the smoke of dung or of a dung fire for prognosticating the weather, see Śakadhūma.

Śata-dyumna ('possessing a hundred glories') is the name of a man who, along with Yajñeṣu, was made prosperous by the priest Mātsya through his knowledge of the exact moment for sacrifice, according to the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa (i. 5, 2, 1).

Śata-pati occurs in a verse of the Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā<sup>1</sup> and the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa<sup>2</sup> as an epithet of Indra, who is described as alone the 'lord of a hundred' among men. To interpret the expression as 'lord of a hundred gods,' as does the commentary on the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, is obviously impossible. It seems clear that there is a reference to an analogous human functionary—viz., the lord of a hundred villages, known in the later law<sup>3</sup>—who was probably at once a judicial deputy of the sovereign and a revenue collector, an ancient magistrate and collector.

Śambara is the name of an enemy of Indra in the Rīgveda.<sup>1</sup> He is mentioned along with Śuṣṇa, Pipru, and Varcin, being in one passage called a Dāsa, son of Kulitara.<sup>2</sup> In another passage<sup>3</sup> he is said to have deemed himself a godling (devaka). His forts, ninety,<sup>4</sup> ninety-nine,<sup>5</sup> or a hundred<sup>6</sup> in number, are alluded to, the word itself in the neuter plural once<sup>7</sup> meaning the 'forts of Śambara.' His great foe was Divodāsa Atithigva, who won victories over him by Indra's aid.<sup>8</sup>

It is impossible to say with certainty whether Śambara was a real person or not. Hillebrandt<sup>9</sup> is strongly in favour of the theory that he was a real chief as enemy of Divodāsa: he relies on the statistics<sup>10</sup> of the mention of the name to show that, whereas he was conceived as a real foe in the hymns of the time of Divodāsa, later texts, like those of the seventh Maṇḍala, make him into a demon, as a result of the change of scene from Arachosia to India. As a matter of fact, apart from this theory, Śambara was quite possibly an aboriginal enemy in India, living in the mountains.<sup>11</sup>

Śarīra, 'body,' is a word of frequent occurrence in Vedic literature.<sup>1</sup> The interest of the Vedic Indians seems early to have been attracted to the consideration of questions connected with the anatomy of the body. Thus a hymn of the Atharvaveda<sup>2</sup> enumerates many parts of the body with some approach to accuracy and orderly arrangement.<sup>3</sup> It mentions the heels (pārṣṇī), the flesh (māṃsa), the ankle-bones (gulphau), the fingers (aṅgulīḥ), the apertures (kha), the two metatarsi (uchlakau), the tarsus (pratiṣṭhā), the two knee-caps (aṣṭhīvantau), the two legs (jaṅghe), the two knee-joints (jānumoh sandhī). Then comes above the two knees (jānū) the four-sided (catuṣṭaya), pliant (śīthira) trunk (kabandha). The two hips (śronī) and the two thighs (ūrū) are the props of the frame

Next come the breast-bone (uras), the cervical cartilages (grīvāḥ), the two breast pieces (stanaṇ), the two shoulder-blades (kaphoḍau), the neck-bones (skandhaṇ), and the backbones (prṣṭīḥ), the collar-bones (aṃsau), the arms (bāhū), the seven apertures in the head (sapta khāni śrṣaṇi), the ears (karṇau), the nostrils (nāsike), the eyes (cakṣaṇi), the mouth (mukha), the jaws (hanū), the tongue (jihvā), the brain (mas-tiṣka), the forehead (lalāṭa), the facial bone (kakāṭikā), the cranium (kapāla), and the structure of the jaws (cityā hanvoh).

This system presents marked similarities with the later system of Caraka and Suśruta,<sup>4</sup> which render certain the names ascribed to the several terms by Hoernle. Kaphoḍau, which is variously read in the manuscripts,<sup>5</sup> is rendered 'collar-bone' by Whitney, but 'elbow' in the St. Petersburg Dictionary. Skandha in the plural regularly<sup>6</sup> denotes 'neck-bones,' or, more precisely, 'cervical vertebræ,' a part denoted also by uṣṇīhā in the plural.<sup>7</sup> Prṣṭī<sup>8</sup> denotes not 'rib,' which is parśu,<sup>9</sup> but a transverse process of a vertebra, and so the vertebra itself, there being in the truncal portion of the spinal column seventeen vertebræ and thirty-four transverse processes. The vertebræ are also denoted by kikasā in the plural,<sup>10</sup> which sometimes<sup>11</sup> is limited to the upper portion of the vertebral column, sometimes<sup>12</sup> to the thoracic portion of the spine. Anūka also denotes the vertebral column,<sup>13</sup> or more specially the lumbar<sup>14</sup> or thoracic<sup>15</sup> portion of the spine; it is said in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>15</sup> that there are twenty transverse processes in the lumbar spine (udara) and thirty-two in the thoracic, which gives twenty-six vertebræ, the true number (but the modern division is seven cervical, twelve thoracic, five lumbar, and two false—the sacrum and the coccyx). The vertebral column is also denoted by karūkara,<sup>16</sup> which, however, is usually found in the plural<sup>17</sup> denoting the transverse processes of the vertebræ, a sense expressed also by kuntāpa.<sup>18</sup>

Grīvā, in the plural, denotes cervical vertebræ, the number seven being given by the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>19</sup> but usually<sup>20</sup> the word simply means windpipe, or, more accurately, the cartilaginous rings under the skin. Jatru, also in the plural, denotes the cervical cartilages,<sup>21</sup> or possibly the costal cartilages, which are certainly so called in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>22</sup> where their number is given as eight.

Bhaṃsas, which occurs thrice in the Atharvaveda,<sup>23</sup> seems to denote the pubic bone or arch rather than the 'buttocks' or 'fundament,' as Whitney<sup>24</sup> takes it.

In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>25</sup> the number of bones in the human body is given as 360. The number of the bones of the head and trunk are given in another passage<sup>26</sup> as follows: The head is threefold, consisting of skin (tvac), bone (asthi), brain (matīṣka); the neck has 15 bones: 14 transverse processes (karūkara) and the strength (vīrya)—i.e., the bone of the centre regarded as one—as the 15th; the breast has 17: 16 cervical cartilages (jatru), and the sternum (uras) as the 17th; the abdominal portion of the spine has 21: 20 transplant. See also Geldner, Vedische Studien, 2, 255, n. 1.

In the two upper parts there are five four-jointed<sup>32</sup> fingers, two kakṣasī (of uncertain meaning),<sup>33</sup> the arm (dos), the collar-bone (akṣa), and the shoulder-blade (aṃsa-phalaka). In the two lower portions there are five four-jointed toes, the thigh, the leg, and three articulations, according to Sāyaṇa's commentary.

Śaryañāvant occurs in several passages of the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> in all of which Sāyaṇa sees a local name. According to his account, Śaryañāḥ (masc. plur.) is a district in Kurukṣetra, Śaryañāvant being a lake not far from it in the back part (jaghanārdhe) of Kurukṣetra. The unusual consistency of his statements on this point is in favour of the word being a place name; it is also to be noted that Kurukṣetra contained the lake Anyatahplakṣā. Roth,<sup>2</sup> however, thought that in two passages<sup>3</sup> the word denoted merely a 'lake,' literally '(water) covered with a thicket of reeds' (śaryāṇa), and in the others a Soma vessel. Zimmer<sup>4</sup> inclines to this rendering. On the other hand, Pischel<sup>5</sup> accepts Sāyaṇa's view. Hillebrandt<sup>6</sup> also sees in the word a place name, but he is inclined to locate it among the 'five tribes,'<sup>7</sup> which is not quite inconsistent with its being in Kurukṣetra, for the connexion of the Pūrus with the later Kurus is known;<sup>8</sup> or perhaps, he suggests, Śaryañāvant is an old name for the Wular sea of Kaśmīr, which was only a reminiscence in Vedic times. This is not probable; still less so is Ludwig's hypothesis<sup>9</sup> that the Śaryañāvant is the later eastern Sarasvatī. Bergaigne<sup>10</sup> regards the name as that of a celestial preparer of Soma.

Śaṣṭr in the Rigveda (i. 162, 5) and the Atharvaveda (ix. 3, 3) denotes the slaughterer of an animal.

Śastra is the technical term<sup>1</sup> for the 'recitation' of the Hotṛ priest, as opposed to the Stotra of the Udgātṛ. The recitations at the morning offering of Soma are called the Ājya and Praūga; at the midday offering, the Marutvatīya and the Niṣkevalya; at the evening offering, the Vaiśvadeva and the Agnimāruta.

Śāṅkhāyana as the name of a teacher is not mentioned in the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa, but it occurs in the Vaṃśa (list of teachers) at the end of the Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka,<sup>1</sup> where Guṇākhyā is given as the authority for that work. In the Śrauta Sūtras<sup>2</sup> the name of Śāṅkhāyana never occurs, but the Gṛhya Sūtras<sup>3</sup> seem to recognize as a teacher Suyajña Śāṅkhāyana. In later times<sup>4</sup> the school flourished in Northern Gujarat. Śāṅkhāyana appears in the Taittirīya Prātiśākhya<sup>5</sup> along with Kāṇḍamāyana.

Śāṭyāyana, 'descendant of Śāṭya,' is the patronymic of a teacher mentioned twice in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> and often in the Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa.<sup>2</sup> In a Vaṃśa (list of teachers) in the latter work<sup>3</sup> he is called a pupil of Jvālāyana, while in the Vaṃśa at the end of the Sāmavidhāna Brāhmaṇa he appears as a pupil of Bādarāyana. The Śāṭyāyanins, his followers, are frequently mentioned in the Sūtras,<sup>4</sup> the Śāṭyāyani Brāhmaṇa<sup>5</sup> and the Śāṭyāyanaka<sup>6</sup> being also referred to in them. It has been shown by Oertel<sup>7</sup> that this Brāhmaṇa bore a close resemblance to, and probably belonged to the same period as, the Jaiminīya Brāhmaṇa.

Śāṇḍa, 'descendant of Śāṇḍa,' is the name of a man in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> who is praised for his generosity. It is not likely that he is identical with Purupanthā mentioned in the next verse.

Śāṇḍilya, 'descendant of Śāṇḍila,' is the patronymic of several teachers (see Udara and Suyajña). The most important Śāṇḍilya is the one cited several times as an authority in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>1</sup> where his Agni, or 'sacrificial fire,' is called Śāṇḍila.<sup>2</sup> From this it appears clearly that he was one of the great teachers of the fire ritual which occupies the fifth and following books of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa. In the Vamśa (list of teachers) at the end of the tenth book<sup>3</sup> he is given as a pupil of Kuśri and a teacher of Vātsya; another list at the end of the last book in the Kāṇva recension<sup>4</sup> gives him as a pupil of Vātsya, and the latter as a pupil of Kuśri. In the confused and worthless<sup>5</sup> lists of teachers at the end of the second and fourth books of the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad he is said to be the pupil of various persons—Kaiśorya Kāpya,<sup>6</sup> Vaiṣṭapureya,<sup>7</sup> Kauśika,<sup>8</sup> Gautama,<sup>9</sup> Baijavāpa,<sup>10</sup> and Āna-

Śām̐bara, properly an adjective in the sense of 'relating to Śam̐bara,' appears in one passage of the R̥gveda (iii. 47, 4) to be used as a substantive denoting 'the contest with Śam̐bara.'

Śām̐bu occurs in the plural with the Aṅgirasas in a passage of the Atharvaveda,<sup>1</sup> no doubt as the name of a family of ancient teachers. There is extant in manuscript a Gṛhya Sūtra of the Śām̐bavyas.<sup>2</sup>

Śālāvatya, 'descendant of Śālāvant,' is the patronymic of Śilaka in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (i. 8, 1), and of Galūnasa Ārkṣākāyana in the Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa (i. 38, 4).

Śikhāṇḍin Yājñasena ('descendant of Yājñasena') is mentioned in the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa (vii. 4) as a priest of Keśin Dālbhya.

Śikhā denotes in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> the 'knot of hair' worn on the top of the head. Wearing the top-knot unloosened was the sign of mourning in the case of women and men alike.<sup>2</sup>

Śigru is the name of a tribe occurring in the passage of the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> in which they are mentioned with the Ajas and the Yakṣus as having been defeated by the Trtsus and King Sudās. It is impossible to say whether they were or were not under the leadership of Bheda, as Ludwig<sup>2</sup> plausibly suggests. If Śigru is connected with the later śigru, 'horse-radish' (Moringa pterygosperma), which is quite probable, it is possible that the tribe was totemistic and non-Āryan, but this is a mere matter of conjecture.<sup>3</sup> The Matsyas ('Fishes') were probably Āryan.

Śiñjāra is the name of a Rṣi twice mentioned in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> along with Kaṇva, Priyamedha, Upastuta, and Atri. Geldner<sup>2</sup> takes the word either as a name of Atri or an adjective.

Śisūka in the Atharvaveda<sup>1</sup> seems to be an adjective meaning 'young,' but according to Bloomfield<sup>2</sup> it has the sense of 'foal.' The commentator, Sāyaṇa, reads Śusūka, which he explains as a 'wild animal so called.' Cf. Āsumga.

2. Śisūmāra is a term applied to Śarkara in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa (xiv. 5, 15), where he is called a Śisūmārārṣi, explained by the commentator to mean a Ṛṣi in the form of a Śisūmāra.

<sup>1</sup> i. 12, 3; ix. 8, 1; xii. 2, 19; 5, 23. Cf. Bloomfield, Journal of the American Oriental Society, 16, xxxv; Hymns of the Atharvaveda, 252; American Journal of Philology, 17, 416, who sees in it śīrṣa-sakti (cf. Macdonell, Vedic Grammar, 64, 2). Böhtlingk, Proceedings of the Saxon Academy, 1897, 50, thinks the word means 'a stiff neck, with head awry.' See Lanman in Whitney, Translation of the Atharvaveda, 14. In Av. xix, 39, 10, śīrṣa-śoka is used for 'headache.'

Śiṣṭa occurs only in a Vālakhilya hymn of the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> where the word seems to be the name of an unimportant clan.

Śuka, 'parrot,' is mentioned in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> where a desire is expressed to transfer to the Śuka and the Ropañākā the yellowness of jaundice. The bird is included in the list of sacrificial victims at the Aśvamedha ('horse sacrifice') in the Yajurveda Saṃhitās.<sup>2</sup> It is described as yellow and as 'of human speech' (puruṣa-vāc).<sup>3</sup> According to Bloomfield,<sup>4</sup> this word is the correct reading for the second half of the obscure Śārisākā of the Atharvaveda.<sup>5</sup>

Śukla. See Yajus.

Śukla-dant, 'white-tusked,' is applied as an epithet to Mrga, 'wild beast,' in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (viii. 23, 3). 'Elephants' must be meant.

Śuca and Śucā occur in an obscure verse of the Rigveda (x. 26, 6), where a man and a woman may be meant.

Śutudrī, twice mentioned in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> is the name of the most easterly river of the Panjab, the modern Sutlej, the Zaradros of Ptolemy and Arrian.<sup>2</sup> In the post-Vedic period the name of this river appears transformed to Śatadru ('flowing in a hundred channels'). The Sutlej has changed its course very considerably within historical times.<sup>3</sup>

Śunaḥśepa, 'Dog's tail,' is the name of a man with the patronymic Ājigarti. According to a tale told in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> and the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra,<sup>2</sup> he was purchased as a victim by Rohita, King Hariścandra's son, who had been promised by his father to Varuṇa as a sacrifice. He was actually bound to the stake, but was released in time through his supplications, supposed to be preserved in certain hymns of the Rigveda.<sup>3</sup> He was adopted by Viśvāmitra, to whose advice he owed the inspiration to ask the gods to release him, and became his son as Devarāta, much to the annoyance of some of Viśvāmitra's sons, who in consequence were cursed by their father. In the Dharma Sūtras<sup>2</sup> it denotes a 'tax,' a sense which is found by Muir<sup>3</sup> in a passage of the Atharvaveda,<sup>4</sup> where śukla is read in the edition with great detriment to the sense. This correction is accepted by Bloomfield<sup>5</sup> and by Whitney.<sup>6</sup> In another passage the same change made by Weber<sup>7</sup> is not accepted by Whitney,<sup>8</sup> and doubtfully by Bloomfield.<sup>9</sup>

Susmīna is a name of Amitratapana, a king of the Śibis, in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (viii. 23, 10).

Śūdra is the designation of the fourth caste in the Vedic state (see Varṇa). It is quite unknown in the Rīgveda except in the Puruṣasūkta<sup>1</sup> ('hymn of man') in the tenth Maṇḍala, where in the earliest version of the origin of the castes the Śūdra for the first time appears. The Rīgveda, on the other hand, knows Dasyu and Dāsa, both as aborigines independent of Āryan control and as subjugated slaves: it is reasonable to reckon the Śūdra of the later texts as belonging to the aborigines who had been reduced to subjection by the Āryans. Strictly speaking, the defeated aborigines must have been regarded as slaves, but it is obvious that, except on occasions when most of the men were slain, which may have occurred quite often, there must have remained too many of them to be used as slaves of individual owners. The villages of the aborigines must have continued to subsist, but under Āryan lordship and control: there may be this amount of truth in Baden Powell's theory, which practically traced all the early cultivating villages in India to Dravidian origin. On the other hand, the term Śūdra would also cover the wild hill tribes which lived by hunting and fishing, and many of which would acknowledge the superiority of their Āryan neighbours: it could, in fact, be applied to all beyond the pale of the Āryan state.

This view of the Śūdra suits adequately the Vedic references to his condition, which would not apply adequately to domestic slaves only. The Śūdra is continually opposed to the Āryan,<sup>2</sup> and the colour of the Śūdra is compared with that of the Āryan,<sup>3</sup> just as his ways are so contrasted.<sup>4</sup> The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>5</sup> in its account of the castes, declares that the Śūdra is anyasya preṣya, 'the servant of another'; kāmothāpya, 'to be expelled at will'; and yathākāmavadhya, 'to be slain at will.' All these terms well enough describe the position of the serf as the result of a conquest: the epithets might have been applied to the English serf after the Norman Conquest with but slight inaccuracy, especially if his master had received a grant of jurisdiction from the Crown. The Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>6</sup> explains that even if prosperous (bahu-ṇṣu, 'having many cows') a Śūdra could not be other than a servant: his business was pādāvanejya, 'the washing of the feet' of his superiors. The Mahābhārata<sup>7</sup> says out and out that a Śūdra has no property (na hi svam asti śūdrasya, 'the Śūdra has nothing he can call his own'). On the other hand, just as in England the royal justice would protect the serf in life and limb,<sup>8</sup> so it appears that the slaying of a Śūdra involved a wergeld of ten cows according to both Baudhāyana<sup>9</sup> and Āpastamba.<sup>10</sup> It may, indeed, be held that this wergeld was only due in case of murder by another than the master, but such limitation is nowhere stated.

In sacred matters the distinction between Āryan and Śūdra was, of course, specially marked. The texts<sup>11</sup> do not hesitate to declare that the upper castes were 'all,' ignoring the Śūdras; the Śūdra is prohibited<sup>12</sup> from milking the cow for the milk required at the Agnihotra ('oblation to Agni'); and the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>13</sup> forbids a man who has been consecrated (drkṣita) for a sacrifice to speak to a Śūdra at all for the time, though the Śātyāyanaka<sup>14</sup> seems to have relaxed this rule by confining it to cases in which the Śūdra was guilty of some sin.

At the sacrifice itself the Śūdra could not be present in the śālā, 'hall'; he is definitely classed in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>15</sup> and the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>16</sup> as unfit for 'sacrifice' (ayajñīya); and declared in the Kāthaka Saṃhitā<sup>17</sup> not to be admitted to drink Soma. At the Pravargya (introductory Soma) rite the performer is not allowed to come in contact with a Śūdra,<sup>18</sup> who here, as in the Kāthaka Saṃhitā,<sup>17</sup> is reckoned as excluded from a share in the Soma-draught. On the other hand, the Śūdra is one of the victims at the Puruṣamedha ('human sacrifice') in the Yajurveda,<sup>19</sup> and a fight between an Āryan and a Śūdra, in which, of course, the former wins, forms a part of the Mahāvratā rite, being perhaps a precursor of the Indian drama.<sup>20</sup>

Other indications, however, exist, showing that it would be undesirable to ignore the real importance of the Śūdra, which again reminds us of the condition of the serf, who, though legally restrained, still gradually won his way to the rank of a free man. Rich Śūdras are mentioned in the early texts,<sup>21</sup> just as Śūdra gahapatis, 'householders,' occur in the Buddhist texts, and Śūdra kings in the legal literature.<sup>22</sup> Sin against Śūdra and Āryan is mentioned;<sup>23</sup> prayers for glory on behalf of Śūdras, as well as of the other castes<sup>24</sup> occur; and the desire to be dear to Śūdra as well as to Āryan is expressed.<sup>25</sup>

The Sūtras also, while they emphasize as general rules points earlier not insisted on, such as their inferiority in sitting, etc.,<sup>26</sup> their exclusion from the study of the Vedas,<sup>27</sup> the danger of contact with them<sup>28</sup> or their food,<sup>29</sup> still recognize that Śūdras can be merchants,<sup>30</sup> or even exercise any trade.<sup>31</sup>

Moreover, the Sūtras<sup>32</sup> permit the marriage of a Śūdrā woman with members of all castes. Though it was a reproach to Vatsa<sup>33</sup> and to Kavaṣa<sup>34</sup> that they were the sons of a Śūdrā and a Dāśī respectively, still the possibility of such a reproach shows that marriages of this kind did take place. Moreover, illicit unions of Ārya and Śūdrā, or Śūdra and Āryā, are referred to in the Saṃhitās of the Yajurveda.<sup>35</sup>

The origin of the term Śūdra is quite obscure, but Zimmer<sup>36</sup> points out that Ptolemy<sup>37</sup> mentions Σύδροι as a people, and he thinks that the Brāhui may be meant. Without laying any stress on this identification,<sup>38</sup> it is reasonable to accept the

Śaunakī-putra, 'son of a female descendant of Śunaka,' is the name of a teacher, a pupil of Kāśyapībālākyāmātharī-putra in the last Vaṃśa (list of teachers) in the Mādhyam̐dina recension of the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (vi. 4, 30. 31).

Śaurpa-nāyya, 'descendant of Śūrpaṇāya,' is the patronymic of a teacher, a pupil of Gautama, in the first two Vaṃśas (lists of teachers) in the Mādhyam̐dina recension of the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (ii. 5, 20 ; iv. 5, 26).

Śaulbāyana or Śaulvāyana, 'descendant of Śulba,' is the patronymic of a teacher, Udaṅka.<sup>1</sup> According to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>2</sup> a Śaulbāyana was the Adhvaryu, or sacrificing priest, of those who had Ayasthūṇa as Gṛhapati ('householder,' the title of the sacrificer who has precedence at a sattra, or sacrificial session).

Śauṣkala is the name of one of the sacrificial victims at the Puruṣamedha ('horse sacrifice') in the Yajurveda.<sup>1</sup> It means, according to the St. Petersburg Dictionary, 'living on dried fish or flesh,'<sup>2</sup> or, according to the native lexicographers, 'selling dried fish,' while Sāyaṇa's commentary on the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa explains the meaning to be one who catches fish with a hook, 'angler.'

Śmaśāna is the name of the 'burial mound' in which the bones of the dead man were laid to rest (cf. Anagnidagdha). It is mentioned in the Atharvaveda,<sup>1</sup> and often later.<sup>2</sup> The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>3</sup> prescribes a four-cornered mound facing the south-east, on ground inclined to the north, out of sight of the village, in a peaceful spot amid beautiful surroundings, or on barren ground. For an Agni-cit ('builder of a fire-altar') a funeral mound like a fire-altar is prescribed. The Easterners (Prācyāḥ) made their mounds round.

Śyāparṇa Sāyakāyana is the name of a man, the last for whom five victims were slain at the building of the sacrificial altar according to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.<sup>1</sup> The same text<sup>2</sup> again mentions him as a builder of the fire-altar. He must have been connected in some way with the Salvas.<sup>3</sup> His family, the Śyāparṇas, appear in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>4</sup> as a self-assertive family of priests whom king Viśvantara excluded from his sacrifice, but whose leader, Rāma Mārgaveya, induced him to take them back. In some way Śyāparṇa was connected with the defeat of the Pañcālas by the Kuntis.<sup>5</sup>

3. Śyāva in one passage of the Rigveda (v. 61, 9) seems clearly, as Sāyaṇa thinks, to denote Śyāvāśva.

Śyāvaka is mentioned as a sacrificer and friend of Indra in the Rigveda (viii. 3, 12; 4, 2). He may be identical with 2. Śyāva.

Śyāvāśva is the name of a man mentioned several times in the Rigveda.<sup>1</sup> The Anukramaṇī (Index) assigns to him a series of hymns in the fifth, eighth, and ninth books.<sup>2</sup> In one of the hymns<sup>3</sup> Śyāvāśva mentions, apparently as his patrons, Taranta (a son of Vidadaśva) and Purumīḍha, as well as Rathavīti. On this hymn is based a legend found in the Bṛhaddevatā,<sup>4</sup> that he was the son of Arcanānas, who was sacrificing for Rathavīti Dālbhya. The father was anxious to obtain the king's daughter for his son in marriage; but though the father was willing, his wife insisted on her son-in-law being a Ṛṣi. The father and son, repulsed, were returning home, when they met on the way Taranta and Purumīḍha, former patrons of the father. These showed him respect, while Taranta's wife, Śaśīyasī, presented Śyāvāśva with much wealth. The son was then fortunate enough to meet the Maruts in the forest, and praised them, thus becoming a seer. As a result the king himself ultimately offered his daughter to Śyāvāśva. Sieg<sup>5</sup> seeks to show that this legend is presupposed in the Rigveda; but it is difficult to accept this view, since the references in the Rigveda are very obscure, and Śaśīyasī is probably no more than an epithet.<sup>6</sup> That there is some Itihāsa at the back of the hymn is clear: what it is can hardly now be determined.

Śyāvāśva's obtaining gifts from Vaidadaśvi is referred to also in the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra.<sup>7</sup> His name occurs in the Atharvaveda<sup>8</sup> in two lists of persons, of which the former includes Purumīḍha, the latter also Arcanānas and Atri. A Sāman is ascribed to him in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa,<sup>9</sup> and he is perhaps referred to in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka.<sup>10</sup> In the to guard the house from thieves or other intruders.<sup>5</sup> He was also employed in hunting the boar (varāha-yu),<sup>6</sup> but was no match for the lion.<sup>7</sup> A hundred dogs are mentioned as a gift in a Dānastuti ('Praise of Gifts') in a Vālakhilya hymn.<sup>8</sup> Elsewhere the dog is regarded as unfit for sacrifice, as being unclean,<sup>9</sup> and is driven away from the sacrifice.<sup>10</sup> To eat dog's flesh was a last resort of despair and hunger.<sup>11</sup> The bones of the feast were given to the dog.<sup>12</sup> Saramā figures in legend as Indra's faithful dog<sup>13</sup> searching for the cows. Rudra is lord of dogs (śva-patī) in the Yajurveda;<sup>14</sup> the 'dog-keeper' (śvanin) is mentioned in the list of sacrificial victims at the Puruṣamedha ('human sacrifice') in the same Saṃhitā.<sup>15</sup> The four-eyed (catur-akṣa) dogs of certain texts<sup>16</sup> are, of course, mythological.<sup>17</sup> Cf. Śvayatha in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> means 'swelling.' Possibly śvayathu, the disease prevalent in Videha according to the Baudhāyana Śrauta Sūtra,<sup>2</sup> was a kind of 'swelling' (? goitre).

Śveta-ketu Āruṇeya<sup>1</sup> ('descendant of Āruṇa') or Uddālaka<sup>2</sup> ('son of Uddālaka') is mentioned repeatedly in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa and the Chāndogya Upaniṣad. In the Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad<sup>3</sup> he appears as Śvetaketu, son of Āruṇi, and as a Gautama. In the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa<sup>4</sup> he is quoted as an authority on the vexed question of the duty of the Sadasya, or the seventeenth priest, at the ritual of the Kauṣītakins, to notify errors in the sacrifice; Āruṇi, his father, is also cited. He was a person of some originality, for he insisted on eating honey despite the general prohibition of the use of that delicacy by Brahmacārins or religious students.<sup>5</sup> He was a contemporary of, and was instructed by the Pañcāla king Pravāhaṇa Jaivala.<sup>6</sup> He was also a contemporary of Janaka, of Videha, and figured among the Brahmin disputants at his court.<sup>7</sup> A story is told of him in the Sāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra:<sup>8</sup> Jala Jātūkarnya was lucky enough to become the Purohita of three peoples or kings, of Kāśi, Kosala, and Videha. Seeing this, Śvetaketu felt annoyed and reproached his father with his excessive devotion to sacrifice, which merely enriched and glorified others, not himself. His father replied, forbidding him to speak thus: he had learned the true method of sacrificing, and his ambition in life had been to discuss it with every Brahmin.

All the references to Śvetaketu belong to the latest period of Vedic literature. It is, therefore, not surprising that the Āpastamba Dharma Sūtra<sup>9</sup> should refer to him as an Avara, or person of later days, who still became a Ṛṣi by special merit. His date, however, must not be fixed too low, because the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa in which he plays so marked a part is certainly earlier than Pāṇini, and was apparently even in that grammarian's time believed to be an ancient work; hence 500 B.C. is probably rather too late than too early a period for Śvetaketu as a rough approximation to a date.<sup>10</sup>

Sam-rudh and Sam-likhita occur in the Atharvaveda (vii. 50, 5) as two technical terms, of unknown sense, used in dicing.

Sam-vatsara, 'year,' is repeatedly mentioned from the Rigveda onwards.<sup>1</sup>

Its duration was, according to the concurrent evidence of the Saṃhitās and Brāhmaṇas, 360 days, divided into 12 months, being, no doubt, roughly a lunar synodic year, which, however, it exceeded in length by 6 days.<sup>2</sup> As a solar year it appears only in the Nidāna Sūtra<sup>3</sup> of the Sāmaveda, where the sun is stated to spend 13½ days in each of the 27 Nakṣatras.

<sup>1</sup> Rv. i. 110, 4; 140, 2; 161, 13; vii. 103, 1. 7, etc.; Av. i. 35, 4; ii. 6, 1; iii. 10, 2; iv. 35, 4; vi. 53, 3, etc.

The year being obviously out of harmony with the solar year (whether sidereal or tropical), efforts were certainly made to effect an assimilation of the natural and the accepted year. As has been seen (see Māsa), the evidence goes strongly to show that the intercalation was not an easy matter in the Brāhmaṇa period, though there are traces of what may be regarded as a five-yearly or six-yearly intercalation. But there is no conclusive evidence that these periods were really observed.

Zimmer,<sup>4</sup> indeed, considers that the evidence required is afforded by the lists of the years, which are sometimes enumerated as five : Samvatsara, Parivatsara, Idāvatsara, Idvatsara, and Vatsara;<sup>5</sup> or Samvatsara, Parivatsara, Idāvatsara, Iduvatsara, Vatsara;<sup>6</sup> or Samvatsara, Idāvatsara, Iduvatsara, Idvatsara, Vatsara;<sup>7</sup> or Samvatsara, Parivatsara, Idāvatsara, Anuvatsara, Udvatsara;<sup>8</sup> or Samvatsara, Parivatsara, Idāvatsara, Anuvatsara, Idvatsara.<sup>9</sup> But it must be noted not merely that the names vary considerably, but that four only are mentioned in some places,<sup>10</sup> in others<sup>11</sup> three, in others<sup>12</sup> two, and in yet others<sup>13</sup> six. Moreover, in none of these enumerations is there any reference to the names being connected with a system of intercalation. It is most probable that here we have no more than a mere series of priestly variations of Vatsara, based on the older and more genuine Samvatsara and Parivatsara as variants of the simple Vatsara, 'year.' The key to the invention of the series is probably to be found in passages like that of the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa,<sup>14</sup> where the several Cāturmāsya ('four-monthly') sacrifices are equated with the different years.<sup>15</sup> Particularly unjustifiable is the attempt of Zimmer to see in the two-year series a series of two years of 354 days each, with an intercalary month in the second; for the year of 354 days, as such, is not known to have existed before the Sūtra period.

Zimmer<sup>16</sup> also finds an attempt at intercalation in the famous 12 days in which the R̥bhūṣ are said to have slept in the house of Agohya.<sup>17</sup> He thinks that they represent twelve days added at the winter solstice to equate the lunar year of 354 days and the solar year of 366 days; and from the reverence paid in German antiquity to the '12 nights,' he infers that this mode of intercalation is Indo-Germanic.<sup>18</sup> There can be little doubt that this view is wrong, and that the 12 days are merely the 'reflexion of the year' (saṃvatsarasya pratimā)<sup>19</sup> in the sense that they represent the twelve months, and have no relation to chronology at all.

A reference to the use of Saṃvatsara alone as the fifth year of the cycle is seen by Shamasastri<sup>20</sup> in the peculiar dating of certain notices in the Baudhāyana Śrauta Sūtra,<sup>21</sup> but this view is improbable.<sup>22</sup>

Little is known of Vedic warfare, but it seems to have been simple. A body of foot soldiers with charioteers composed every army, the two going together,<sup>5</sup> and the foot soldiers being often overthrown by the charioteers,<sup>6</sup> who were doubtless the Kṣatriyas and their foremost retainers. Probably the foot soldiers bore little armour, and used only the bow for offence, as is suggested by the account that Herodotus gives of the Indian contingent of the army with which Xerxes invaded Greece.<sup>7</sup> The nobles, on the other hand, may have had cuirass (Varman), helmet (Śiprā), and hand-guard (Hastaghna) as a protection from the friction of the bowstring. On the car was the charioteer, and on his left the warrior (Sārathi, Savyaṣṭhā). Riding is never mentioned in war,<sup>8</sup> and would hardly have been suited to Vedic ideas, for the warrior mainly depended on his bow, which he could not have used effectively from horse-back. The offensive weapon (Āyudha) was practically the bow; spear and sword and axe were very seldom used.

Whether there was a strict tribal organization of the host, such as is once alluded to in the Homeric poems,<sup>9</sup> and is also recognized in Germany by Tacitus,<sup>10</sup> is uncertain (cf. Vrāta), but in the Epic relations (Jñāti) fight together,<sup>11</sup> and this rule, no doubt, applied more or less in Vedic times also.

Cities were besieged and invested (uṣa-sad, pra-bhid),<sup>12</sup> probably as a rule by blockade, since the ineffective means of assault of the time would have rendered storming difficult and expensive. Hillebrandt<sup>13</sup> thinks that the pur carishnū of the Rigveda<sup>14</sup> was a kind of chariot; it may—like the Trojan horse—have been an Indian anticipation of the Roman means of assaulting a town.

Sapta Sūryāḥ, the 'seven suns' referred to in the Saṃhitās,<sup>1</sup> are named in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka<sup>2</sup> as Āroga, Bhrāja, Paṭara, Pataṅga, Svarṇara, Jyotiṣimant, and Vibhāsa, but these occur very rarely even later.<sup>3</sup> Weber at one time<sup>4</sup> thought that the seven planets (see Graha) were meant by the phrase, but later he abandoned the idea.<sup>5</sup> Probably the 'seven rays' of the Rigveda<sup>6</sup> are meant.

Sapta-mānuṣa is found in one passage of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> as an epithet of Agni, 'belonging to the seven tribes.' Hopkins<sup>2</sup> thinks that this is a reference to the seven 'family' books of the Rigveda (ii.-viii.), but this seems less likely than the view of Roth,<sup>3</sup> that saptamānuṣa is equivalent to vaiśvānara.

Sapta-vadhri is the name of a protégé of the Aśvins, who appear from several passages of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> to have rescued him from a tree in which he had got fastened. He is mentioned in the Atharvaveda.<sup>2</sup> According to Geldner,<sup>3</sup> he is identical with Atri.

Sabhā is the name of an 'assembly' of the Vedic Indians as well as of the 'hall' where they met in assembly. It is often mentioned in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later,<sup>2</sup> but its exact character is not certain. The hall was clearly used for dicing,<sup>3</sup> presumably when the assembly was not transacting public business: a dicer is called sabhā-sthānu, 'pillar of the assembly hall,' doubtless because of his constant presence there.<sup>4</sup> The hall also served, like the Homeric λέσχη, as a meeting-place for social intercourse and general conversation about cows and so forth,<sup>5</sup> possibly for debates and verbal contests.<sup>6</sup>

According to Ludwig,<sup>7</sup> the Sabhā was an assembly not of all the people, but of the Brahmins and Maghavans ('rich patrons'). This view can be supported by the expressions

<sup>2</sup> Av. v. 31, 6; vii. 12, 1, 2; viii. 10, 5; xii. 1, 56; xix. 55, 6; Taittiriya Samhitā, i. 7, 6, 7; Maitrāyaṇī Samhitā, iv. 7, 4; Vājasaneyi Samhitā, iii. 45; xvi. 24; xx. 17; Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa, i. 1, 10, 6; Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, ii. 3, 2, 3; v. 3, 1, 10; Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa, vii. 9, etc.

<sup>3</sup> Rv. x. 34, 6; Av. v. 31, 6; xii. 3, 46 (here dyūta is used in place of Sabhā).

<sup>4</sup> Vājasaneyi Samhitā, xxx. 18; Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 4, 16, 1, with Sāyaṇa's note. Zimmer, Allindisches Leben, 172, inclines to see in the formula (Vājasaneyi Samhitā, iii. 45; xx. 17; Taittiriya Samhitā, i. 8, 3, 1; Kāthaka Samhitā, ix. 4; Maitrāyaṇī Samhitā, i. 10, 2) 'what sin we have committed in the village, the jungle, the Sabhā' a reference to attacks on the great (Mahādhara on Vājasaneyi Samhitā, iii. 45), or partiality in deciding disputes (Mahādhara, ibid., xx. 17). But it may refer to gambling or other non-political activity, as Eggeling, Sacred Books of the East, 12, 398, takes it, though he renders it differently, ibid., 44, 265.

<sup>5</sup> Rv. vi. 28, 6. Cf. viii. 4, 9. So in Av. vii. 12, 2, the assembly is hailed as nariṣṭā, 'merriment.' But the same hymn (vii. 12, 3) contains a clear reference to serious speech in the Sabhā. For the blending of serious political work and amusement, cf. Tacitus, Germania, 22.

sabheya, 'worthy of the assembly,' applied to a Brahmin,<sup>8</sup> rayiḥ sabhāvān, 'wealth fitting for the assembly,'<sup>9</sup> and so on. But Bloomfield<sup>10</sup> plausibly sees in these passages a domestic use of Sabhā, which is recognized by the St. Petersburg Dictionary in several passages<sup>11</sup> as relating to a house, not to the assembly at all. Zimmer<sup>12</sup> is satisfied that the Sabhā was the meeting-place of the village council, presided over by the Grāmaṇī. But of this there is no trace whatever. Hillebrandt<sup>13</sup> seems right in maintaining that the Sabhā and the Samiti cannot be distinguished, and that the reference to well-born (su-jāta)<sup>14</sup> men being there in session is to the Āryan as opposed to the Dāsa or Śūdra, not to one class of Āryan as opposed to the other. Hillebrandt also sees in Agni 'of the hall' (sabhya) a trace of the fire used in sacrifice on behalf of the assembly when it met.<sup>15</sup>

Women did not go to the Sabhā,<sup>16</sup> for they were, of course, excluded from political activity. For the Sabhā as a court-house, cf. Grāmyavādin. There is not a single notice of the work done by the Sabhā.

<sup>9</sup> Rv. iv. 2, 5; in i. 167, 3, sabhāvati is applied to 'speech,' or perhaps to yajā, 'woman.'

<sup>11</sup> Av. viii. 10, 5 (where the sense is, however, clearly 'assembly'; see viii. 10, 6); Taittirīya Samhitā, iii. 4, 8, 6; Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, i. 1, 10, 3; Chāndogya Upaniṣad, viii. 14 (but here the sense is certainly 'assembly hall'; see v. 3, 6, where the king is described as going to the assembly hall: sabhā-ga) The exact sense given by the St. Petersburg Dictionary is the 'society room' in a dwelling-house.

<sup>12</sup> Altindisches Leben, 174. But he ignores Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, iii. 3, 4, 14; Chāndogya Upaniṣad, v. 3, 6, which show that the king went to the Sabhā just as much as to the Samiti, and he cannot adduce any passage to show that the Grāmaṇī presided.

Sāyaṇa's note. Cf. Weber, Indische Streifen, i, 77, n. 1.

Dictionary thinks it is an adjective equivalent in sense to sabhā-ga, 'going to the assembly.' As he is dedicated to Dharma, 'Justice,' it is difficult not to see in him a member of the Sabhā as a law court, perhaps as one of those who sit to decide cases: there is nothing to show whether the whole assembly did so, or only a chosen body. The special use of Sabhācara suggests the latter alternative. See also Sabhāsad.

Sabhā-pāla is found in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa (iii. 7, 4, 6), where the sense may be 'guardian of an assembly hall.'

Sabhāvin in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa (iii. 4, 16, 1) denotes, according to the commentator Sāyaṇa, the 'keeper of a gambling hall.'

Sabhā-sad, 'sitter in the assembly,' is probably a technical description of the assessors who decided legal cases in the assembly (cf. Sabhācara). The term, which is found in the Atharvaveda<sup>1</sup> and later,<sup>2</sup> cannot well merely denote any member of the assembly. It is also possible that the Sabhāsads, perhaps the heads of families, were expected to be present at the Sabhā oftener than the ordinary man: the meetings of the assembly for justice may have been more frequent than for general discussion and decision.

Sam-anika is a word of obscure sense occurring in two passages of the Atharvaveda.<sup>1</sup> Bloomfield<sup>2</sup> renders it 'hook' in the first, and takes it to mean an insect destructive of grain in the other.

<sup>13</sup> Rv. iv. 58, 8, where, as in vi. 75, 4; x. 168, 2, Roth sees the sense of 'embrace.' The parallel with the festivals of Greece, where only young girls were able freely to mix with strangers, and which afforded the basis of so many of the comedies of the later school, is striking (cf. Mahaffy, Greek Literature, 1, 2, 259 et seq.).

Cf. Geldner, Rigveda, Glossar, 190.

Samara in the sense of 'battle' is found in the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa,<sup>1</sup> and, according to Geldner,<sup>2</sup> in the Rigveda.<sup>3</sup>

Hence it also denotes more generally 'season,' a rare use.<sup>2</sup> More commonly it is simply 'year';<sup>3</sup> but in one place the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>4</sup> interprets it in the Vājasaneyi Samhitā<sup>5</sup> as meaning 'month,' a doubtful sense.

Samāna. See Prāṇa.

Sam-iti denotes an 'assembly' of the Vedic tribe. It is already mentioned in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> and often later,<sup>2</sup> sometimes in connexion with Sabhā.<sup>3</sup> Ludwig<sup>4</sup> considers that the Samiti included all the people, primarily the viśah, 'subjects,' but also the Maghavans and Brahmins if they desired, though the Sabhā was their special assembly. This view is not probable, nor is that of Zimmer,<sup>5</sup> that the Sabhā was the village assembly. Hillebrandt appears to be right in holding that Samiti and Sabhā are much the same, the one being the assembly, the other primarily the place of assembly.

The king went to the assembly<sup>7</sup> just as he went to the Sabhā. That he was elected there, as Zimmer<sup>8</sup> thinks, is as uncertain as whether he was elected at all (see Rājan). But there are clear signs that concord between king and assembly were essential for his prosperity.<sup>9</sup>

It is reasonable to assume that the business of the assembly was general deliberation on policy of all kinds, legislation so far as the Vedic Indian cared to legislate, and judicial work (cf. Sabhāsad). But of all these occupations there is, perhaps as a result of the nature of the texts, little or no evidence directly available.

The gods had a Samiti, hence called daivī, 'divine,'<sup>10</sup> just as they had a Sabhā.<sup>11</sup>

The assembly disappears as an effective part of government in the Buddhist texts,<sup>12</sup> the Epic,<sup>13</sup> and the law-books.<sup>14</sup>

It is, of course, very probable that at no time was the Samiti a place where any or much attention was paid to the views of the common man. Princes and great men spoke; the rest approved or disapproved, as in Homeric times and in Germany (cf. Lang, Anthropology and the Classics, 51 et seq.; Tacitus, Germania, 11. 12, where their general duty of discussion and their criminal jurisdiction are mentioned).

so far as it indicates that the Vedic Indians knew the sea. This is, indeed, denied by Vivien de Saint Martin,<sup>1</sup> but not only do Max Müller<sup>2</sup> and Lassen<sup>3</sup> assert it, but even Zimmer,<sup>4</sup> who is inclined to restrict their knowledge of the sea as far as possible, admits it in one passage of the Rigveda,<sup>5</sup> and of course later.<sup>6</sup> He points out that the ebb and flow of the sea are unknown, that the mouths of the Indus are never mentioned, that fish is not a known diet in the Rigveda (cf. Matsya), and that in many places Samudra is metaphorically used, as of the two oceans,<sup>7</sup> the lower and the upper oceans,<sup>8</sup> etc. In other passages he thinks that Samudra denotes the river Indus when it receives all its Panjab tributaries.<sup>9</sup> It is probable that this is to circumscribe too narrowly the Vedic knowledge of the ocean, which was almost inevitable to people who knew the Indus. There are references to the treasures of the ocean,<sup>10</sup> perhaps pearls or the gains of trade,<sup>11</sup> and the story of Bhujyu seems to allude to marine navigation.

That there was any sea trade with Babylon in Vedic times cannot be proved: the stress laid<sup>12</sup> on the occurrence in the Hebrew Book of Kings<sup>13</sup> of qof and tukhiim, 'monkey' (kapi) and 'peacock,' is invalidated by the doubtful date of the Book of Kings. There is, besides, little reason to assume an early date for the trade that no doubt developed later, perhaps about 700 B.C.<sup>14</sup>

Samrāj in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later<sup>2</sup> means 'superior ruler,' 'sovereign,' as expressing a greater degree of power than 'king' (Rājan). In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>3</sup> in accordance with its curious theory of the Vājapeya and Rājasūya, the Samrāj is asserted to be a higher authority than a king, and to have become one by the sacrifice of the Vājapeya. There is, however, no trace of the use of the word as 'emperor' in the sense of an 'overlord of kings,' probably because political conditions furnished no example of such a status, as for instance was attained in the third century B.C. by Aśoka. At the same time Samrāj denotes an important king like Janaka of Videha.<sup>4</sup> It is applied in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>5</sup> as the title of the eastern kings. Cf. Rājya.

Sarayu is mentioned thrice in the Rigveda as the name of a river. Citraratha and Arṇa are said to have been defeated apparently by the Turvaśas and Yadus who crossed the

<sup>1</sup> iv. 30, 18. This passage gives no help, because the possibility is open either to suppose that the Turvaśa-Yadu are not mentioned as defeating the Āryans Citraratha and Arṇa; or, if they are, to suppose that they may have come east against the two.

itself in the sands of Patiala (see Vinaśana). Even Roth<sup>3</sup> admits that this river is intended in some passages of the Rigveda. With the Dr̥ṣadvatī<sup>4</sup> it formed the western boundary of Brahmāvarta (see Madhyadeśa). It is the holy stream of early Vedic India. The Sūtras<sup>5</sup> mention sacrifices held on its banks as of great importance and sanctity.

In many other passages of the Rigveda,<sup>6</sup> and even later,<sup>7</sup> Roth held that another river, the Sindhu (Indus), was really meant: only thus could it be explained why the Sarasvatī is called the 'foremost of rivers' (nadītamā),<sup>8</sup> is said to go to the ocean,<sup>9</sup> and is referred to as a large river, on the banks of which many kings,<sup>10</sup> and, indeed, the five tribes, were located.<sup>11</sup> This view is accepted by Zimmer<sup>12</sup> and others.<sup>13</sup>

On the other hand, Lassen<sup>14</sup> and Max Müller<sup>15</sup> maintain the identity of the Vedic Sarasvatī with the later Sarasvatī.<sup>16</sup> The latter is of opinion that in Vedic times the Sarasvatī was as large a stream as the Sutlej, and that it actually reached the sea either after union with the Indus or not, being the 'iron citadel,' as the last boundary on the west, a frontier of the Panjab against the rest of India. There is no conclusive evidence of there having been any great change in the size or course of the Sarasvatī, though it would be impossible to deny that the river may easily have diminished in size. But there are strong reasons to accept the identification of the later and the earlier Sarasvatī throughout. The insistence on the divine character of the river is seen in the very hymn<sup>17</sup> which refers to it as the support of the five tribes, and corresponds well with its later sacredness. Moreover, that hymn alludes to the Pārāvatas, a people shown by the later evidence of the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa<sup>18</sup> to have been in the east, a very long way from their original home, if Sarasvatī means the Indus. Again, the Pūrus, who were settled on the Sarasvatī,<sup>19</sup> could with great difficulty be located in the far west. Moreover, the five tribes might easily be held to be on the Sarasvatī, when they were, as they seem to have been, the western neighbours of the Bharatas in Kurukṣetra, and the Sarasvatī could easily be regarded as the boundary of the Panjab in that sense. Again, the 'seven rivers' in one passage<sup>20</sup> clearly designate a district: it is most probable that they are not the five rivers with the Indus and the Kubhā (Cabul river), but the five rivers, the Indus and the Sarasvatī. Nor is it difficult to see why the river is said to flow to the sea: either the Vedic poet had never followed the course of the river to its end, or the river did actually penetrate the desert either completely or for a long distance, and only in the Brāhmaṇa period was its disappear-

<sup>20</sup> Rv. viii. 24, 27. The connexion of Sarasvatī and the seven rivers is rather vague. In Rv. viii. 54, 4, Sarasvatī and the seven rivers are separately invoked, and in vi. 61, 10, 12, she is referred to as 'seven-sistered' (sapta-

svasā). In vii. 36, 6, she is called the 'seventh,' which makes the Sarasvatī one of the rivers. If the former passages are to be treated as precise, then sapta-svasā may be considered to show that the Sarasvatī was outside the river system (which would then be Indus, Kubhā, and the five rivers of the Panjab; see Sapta Sindhavah); but the expression may be loosely meant for one of seven sisters.

ance in the desert found out. It is said, indeed, in the Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā<sup>21</sup> that the five rivers go to the Sarasvatī, but this passage is not only late (as the use of the word Deśa shows), but it does not say that the five rivers meant are those of the Panjab. Moreover, the passage has neither a parallel in the other Saṃhitās, nor can it possibly be regarded as an early production; if it is late it must refer to the later Sarasvatī.

Hillebrandt,<sup>22</sup> on the whole, adopts this view of the Sarasvatī,<sup>23</sup> but he also sees in it, besides the designation of a mythical stream, the later Vaitaraṇī,<sup>24</sup> as well as the name of the Arghandab in Arachosia.<sup>25</sup> This opinion depends essentially on his theory that the sixth Maṇḍala of the Rigveda places the scene of its action in Iranian lands, as opposed to the seventh Maṇḍala: it is as untenable as that theory itself.<sup>26</sup> Brunnhofer<sup>27</sup> at one time accepted the Iranian identification, but later<sup>28</sup> decided for the Oxus, which is quite out of the question. The point is, of course, doubtful, since the word occurs in the nominative only.

Sarpis denotes 'melted butter,' whether in a liquid or solidified condition, and not differing from Ghr̥ta according to the St. Petersburg Dictionary. Roth there rejects the definition cited by Sāyaṇa in his commentary on the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>1</sup> which discriminates Sarpis as the liquid and Ghr̥ta as the solid condition of the butter. The word is repeatedly mentioned in the Rigveda<sup>2</sup> and later.<sup>3</sup> soon is little noted in the Vedic texts, except in so far as the Marut hymns may be deemed to be a description of the monsoon. See Rv. i. 19, 7; 37, 6 et seq.; 38, 8; 64, 8; 88, 5; v. 83, 1 et seq.; 85, 4; Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 42-44.

Salva is the name of a people mentioned in a passage of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>1</sup> which records a boast by Śyāparṇa Sāyakāyana that if a certain rite of his had been completed, his race would have been the nobles, Brahmins, and peasants of the Salvās, and even as it was his race would surpass the Salvās. This people appears also to be alluded to as Sālvīh (prajāh) in the Mantra Pāṭha,<sup>2</sup> where they are said to have declared that their king was Yaugandharī when they stayed their chariots<sup>3</sup> on the banks of the Yamunā. There is later evidence<sup>4</sup> indicating that the Sālvās or Śālvās were closely connected with the Kuru-Pāñcālas, and that apparently some of them, at least, were victorious near the banks of the Yamunā. There is no good evidence to place them in the north-west in Vedic times.<sup>5</sup>

Sāmvaraṇi is found in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> in one passage, where it naturally seems to be a patronymic ('descendant of Sāmvaraṇa') of Manu. According to Bloomfield,<sup>2</sup> it is a corruption for Sāvarṇi, a reference to Manu's birth from the savarṇā, 'similar' female who was substituted for Saranyū according to the legend (see Manu). This is possible, but not certain. Scheftelowitz<sup>3</sup> thinks that the reading of the Kaśmir manuscript of the Rigveda, which has sāmvarāṇam, 'found on the sacrificial ground,' as an epithet of Soma, is to be preferred. But this seems quite improbable.<sup>4</sup> We must either recognize a real man called Manu Sāmvaraṇi; or take Manu as one name, Sāmvaraṇi as another; or admit that Manu Sāmvaraṇi is simply Manu with a patronymic derived from an unknown legend.

<sup>1</sup> ii. 5, 20; iv. 5, 26. A Sāmkr̥tya occurs also in the Taittirīya Prātisākhya, viii. 21; x. 21; xvi. 16.

Sām̐jivī-putra, 'son of Sām̐jivī,' is the name of a teacher who appears in the Vaṃśa (list of teachers) at the end of the tenth Kāṇḍa of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>1</sup> and at the end of the fourteenth Kāṇḍa in the Kāṇva recension,<sup>2</sup> as a pupil of Māṇḍūkāyani. In the Vaṃśas at the end of the Brhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad in both recensions<sup>3</sup> he is given as a pupil of Prāśniputra Āsurivāsin. It seems clear that he united in himself two lines of teachers—that of the tradition of the fire-cult from Śāṇḍilya, and that of the tradition of Yājñavalkya.

Sārṇjaya is found in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> in a Dānastuti ('praise of gifts') where the word probably denotes the 'Sṛṇjaya king' rather than a 'descendant of Sṛṇjaya.' According to the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra,<sup>2</sup> he was Prastoka, mentioned in the same hymn, but this conclusion is not very cogent. He was clearly a patron of the Bharadvājas. Sārva-seni ('descendant of Sarvasena') is the patronymic of Sauceya in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (vii. 1, 10, 3).

Sālā-vṛka is found twice in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> apparently denoting the 'hyæna' or 'wild dog.' This sense also seems appropriate in the later narrative of the destruction of the Yatis by Indra,<sup>2</sup> who is said to have handed them over to the Sālāvṛkas. Sālā-vṛkeya<sup>3</sup> is a variant form of the same word, meaning literally 'descendant of a Sālāvṛka.' The feminine is Sālāvṛkī,<sup>4</sup> but in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā<sup>5</sup> it appears as Salāvṛkī. Cf. Tarakṣu.

Simha denotes the 'lion' in the Rīgveda<sup>1</sup> and later.<sup>2</sup> The roaring (naḍ) of the lion is often alluded to,<sup>2</sup> and is called thundering (stanatha).<sup>4</sup> He wanders about (ku-cara) and lives in the hills (giri-sṭha),<sup>5</sup> and is clearly the 'dread wild beast that slays' (mṛgo bhīma upahatnuḥ)<sup>6</sup> to which Rudra is compared. When Agni, who has entered the waters, is compared to a lion,<sup>7</sup> the reference may be to the lion's habit of springing on animals at drinking places. That a jackal should defeat the lion is spoken of as a marvel.<sup>8</sup> The lion, being dangerous to men,<sup>9</sup> was trapped,<sup>10</sup> lain in wait for in ambush,<sup>11</sup> or chased by hunting bands.<sup>12</sup> But dogs were terrified of lions.<sup>13</sup> The lioness (simhī) was also famous for her courage: the aid given by Indra to Sudās against the vast host of his enemies is compared to the defeat of a lioness by a ram (Petva).<sup>14</sup> The gaping jaws of the lioness when attacking men are alluded to in Su-dās is the name of the Tṛtsu king who won a famous victory over the ten kings, as described in a hymn of the Rigveda.<sup>1</sup> At one time Viśvāmitra was his Purohita, and accompanied him in his victorious raids over the Vipāś (Beās) and Śutudrī (Sutlej).<sup>2</sup> The Aśvins gave him a queen, Sudevī,<sup>3</sup> and also helped him on another occasion.<sup>4</sup> He appears with Trasadasyu in a late hymn without hint of rivalry,<sup>5</sup> but elsewhere he seems to be referred to as defeated by Purukutsa, Trasadasyu's father.<sup>6</sup> In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>7</sup> he is recognized as a great king, with Vasiṣṭha as his Purohita, and similarly in the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra,<sup>8</sup> where his generosity to his priest is related.

His exact ancestry is a little uncertain, because he is called Paijavana, 'son of Pijavana,' as Yāska explains the patronymic. If this explanation is correct, Divodāsa must have been his grandfather. If he was the son of Divodāsa, Pijavana must be understood as a more remote ancestor. The former alternative seems the more probable. Cf. Turvaśa, Dāśarājña. Paijavana, Bharata, Saudāsa.

Su-bandhu in the hymns of the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> is taken by Sāyaṇa to be a proper name; but this is not certain, Roth<sup>2</sup> seeing in the passages only an ordinary noun meaning 'a good friend.' The later tradition<sup>3</sup> explains that Subandhu and his brothers, called Gaupāyanas, were priests of Asamāti, who cast them off and took two others, Kirāta and Ākuli. By these two in pigeon form Subandhu was caused to swoon, but was revived by his three brothers, who recited certain hymns.<sup>4</sup>

Sū-kara 'wild boar,' has the appearance of being an onomatopoeic word ('making the sound sū'); it is more probably a very old word going back to the Indo-European period, and cognate with the Latin su-culus ('little pig'), being transformed in sense by popular etymology.<sup>1</sup> It occurs in the Rigveda<sup>2</sup> and later.<sup>3</sup> It appears once in the Atharvaveda accompanied by mṛga,<sup>4</sup> the combined words apparently meaning 'wild hog,' as opposed to Varāha, 'boar.'

Sūta is the name of a court official who is often mentioned with the Grāmaṇī. He is one of the eight Viras in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa,<sup>1</sup> and of the eleven Ratnins in other texts.<sup>2</sup> He also appears in the Atharvaveda<sup>3</sup> among the kingmakers (Rājakṛt) and in the Śatrarudriya<sup>4</sup> ('section dealing with the hundred Rudras') of the Yajurveda. grahītr, who occurs in several passages beside the Sūta, is the 'charioteer,' renders this version improbable. Eggeling<sup>8</sup> thinks that he was, in the Brāhmaṇas at least, a minstrel and court poet, while Weber<sup>9</sup> considers that his name denotes him as 'consecrated'—that is, one who has constant access to the king. In the Epic the Sūta serves as a royal herald and bard:<sup>10</sup> it may be that the curious words ahanti,<sup>11</sup> ahantya,<sup>12</sup> or ahantva<sup>13</sup> applied to him<sup>14</sup> in the Śatarudriya denote his sacred character at once as minstrel and as herald—a combination of functions not unknown elsewhere.

Sūnu is a common word for 'son' from the Rigveda onwards.<sup>1</sup> The etymological sense seems to be 'he who is borne,' and then 'the begotten.'<sup>2</sup> But the use of Sūnu in the Rigveda<sup>3</sup> is predominantly in relation to the father, and only rarely in its connexion with words for mother.<sup>4</sup> Thus a father is 'easy of access' (sūpāyana) to his son (sūnu);<sup>5</sup> but in another passage,<sup>6</sup> where the same term is applied to earth as a mother, the word used for son is Putra. No conclusion as to matriarchy can of course be drawn from the etymology. On the relation of son and father, see Pitr.

Sūrya, the 'sun,' plays a great part in Vedic mythology and religion,<sup>1</sup> corresponding with the importance of the sun as a factor in the physical life of the peninsula. In the Rigveda<sup>2</sup> the sun is normally regarded as a beneficent power, a not unnatural view in a people which must apparently have issued from the cold regions of the Himālaya mountains. Its heat is, however, alluded to in some passages of the Rigveda,<sup>3</sup> as well as referred to in the Atharvaveda and the literature of the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>4</sup>

obscuration of the sun by a thunderstorm.<sup>6</sup> The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>7</sup> presents a naïve conception of the course of the sun, which it regards as bright on one side only, and as returning from west to east by the same road, but with the reverse side turned towards the earth, thus at night illuminating the stars in heaven.<sup>8</sup> In the Rigveda<sup>9</sup> wonder is expressed that the sun does not fall.

There are several references to eclipses in the Rigveda. In one passage<sup>10</sup> Svarbhānu, a demon, is said to have eclipsed the sun with darkness, while Atri restores the light of the sun, a similar feat being elsewhere attributed to his family, the Atris.<sup>11</sup> In the Atharvaveda<sup>12</sup> Rāhu appears for the first time in connexion with the sun. Indra's defeat of Sūrya<sup>6</sup> may also be explained as alluding to an eclipse; in two other passages<sup>13</sup> such an interpretation seems at least probable. Ludwig<sup>14</sup> not only argues that the Rigveda knows the theory of eclipses caused by an occultation of the sun by the moon, and regards the sun as going round the earth,<sup>15</sup> but even endeavours to identify an eclipse referred to in the Rigveda with one that occurred in 1029 B.C. These views are completely refuted by Whitney.<sup>16</sup>

Vedic literature. This solar year is divided into two halves—the Uttarāyana,<sup>18</sup> when the sun goes north, and the Dakṣiṇāyana,<sup>19</sup> when it goes south. There can be no doubt that these periods denote the time when the sun turns north from the winter solstice, and when it turns south from the summer solstice, for the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa<sup>20</sup> says so in perfectly clear language. The alternative theory is to regard the periods as those when the sun is in the north—i.e., when it is north of the equator, and when it is in the south, taking as points of departure the equinoxes, not the solstices; but this view has no support in Vedic literature, and is opposed to the fact that the equinoxes play no part in Vedic astronomical theory.<sup>21</sup> There are only doubtful references to the solstices in the Rigveda.<sup>22</sup>

<sup>18</sup> The form Uttarāyana is later (Manu, vi. 10, etc.). Udagayana occurs in the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad, vi. 3, 1; Kauṣika Sūtra, lxvii. 4; Lāṭyāyana Śrauta Sūtra, viii. 1, 1; Gobhila Gṛhya Sūtra, i. 1, 3; Āśvalāyana Gṛhya Sūtra, i. 4, etc.; Weber, Naxatra, 2, 201, 212; Jyotiṣa, 107 et seq.; Yāska, Nirukta, xiv. 10.

<sup>19</sup> The form is late (Manu, i. 67, etc.). In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, ii. 1, 3, the two Ayana are equated each with three seasons—the northern course with spring, summer, and rains; the southern with autumn, winter, and cool season. But this is merely an inevitable inaccuracy, since no real season begins with the winter solstice.

<sup>27</sup> Ludwig, Translation of the Rigveda, 3, 188, finds in the Rigveda, i. 110, 2, a mention of the inclination of the ecliptic to the equator, and in x. 86, 4, a reference to the axis of the earth. Cf. Tilak, Orion, 158 et seq.; Oldenberg, Rigveda-Noten, 1, 102, 105. These views are clearly quite wrong. The notions of the sun given in the Brāhmaṇas are all very naive and simple: the distance of heaven and the sun from the earth is the height of a thousand cows one on the top of the other (Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, xvi. 8, 6), or forty-four days' journey for a horse (ibid., xxv. 10, 16), or a thousand days' journey for a horse (Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, ii. 17, 8), or a hundred leagues (Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa, viii. 3). They record also such facts as that the sun rises from and sets in the waters (Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, iv. 20, 13; cf. Nirukta, vi. 17; Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa, xxiv. 4, 5; xxvi. 1), and that it sets in the west (ibid., xviii. 9). The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa calls the sun circular (vii. 4, 1, 17), and also four-cornered (catuḥ-śraṅkti) in xiv. 3, 1, 17, and so on. See Weber, Indische Studien, 9, 358 et seq.

Sūrya-nakṣatra is found in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> in a passage where Sāyaṇa takes it as denoting a Nakṣatra, which gives out rays of light like the sun. But the real sense (as the Kāṇva text helps to show) is that the sacrificer may take the sun for his Nakṣatra—i.e., he may neglect the Nakṣatras altogether and rely on the sun.

Sṛjaya is the name of one of the victims at the Aśvamedha ('horse sacrifice') in the Yajurveda.<sup>1</sup> What it was is unknown: Mahīdhara on the Vājasaneyi passage calls it a kind of bird; Sāyaṇa on the Taittirīya Saṃhitā gives the alternatives 'black fly' (when sṛjāyā must be read), 'white serpent,' and 'black buffalo.'

Sṛñjaya is the name of a people mentioned as early as the Rigveda. Sṛñjaya (that is, the king of this people) Daivavāta is celebrated as victorious over the Turvaśas and the Vṛcīvants,<sup>1</sup> and his sacrificial fire is referred to.<sup>2</sup> In connexion with Daivavāta is also mentioned Sāhadevyā Somaka,<sup>3</sup> no doubt another prince; for in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>4</sup> we find Somaka Sāhadevyā and his father, Sahadeva (originally Suplan) Sārñjaya, as kings who were anointed by Parvata and Nārada. The Rigveda<sup>5</sup> has also a Dānastuti ('praise of gifts') of Prastoka,<sup>6</sup> a Sṛñjaya, who is lauded along with Divodāsa. Moreover, Vītahavya<sup>7</sup> seems to have been a Sṛñjaya, though Zimmer<sup>8</sup> prefers to take the derivative word, Vaitahavya, not as a patronymic, but as an epithet.

It seems probable that the Sṛñjayas and the Tṛtsus were closely allied, for Divodāsa and a Sṛñjaya prince are celebrated together,<sup>9</sup> and the Turvaśas were enemies of both.<sup>10</sup> This view is borne out by the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,<sup>11</sup> which recognizes Devabhāga Śrautarṣa as Purohita of the Kurus and the Sṛñjayas.

On the other hand, some disaster certainly befel the SṚŪjayas, at least the Vaitahavyas, for they are said in the Atharvaveda<sup>12</sup> to have offended the Bhṛguś and to have ended miserably. There is, it is true, no precise confirmation of this notice, but both the Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā<sup>13</sup> and the Taittiriya Saṃhitā,<sup>14</sup> in independent passages, refer to the SṚŪjayas having sustained some serious loss, though the notice is in each case coupled with a ritual error, much as in the Old Testament the fate of kings depends on their devotion to Jahve or their disobedience. It is justifiable to recognize some disaster in this allusion.

The geographical position of the SṚŪjayas is uncertain. Hillebrandt<sup>15</sup> suggests that in early times they must be looked for west of the Indus with Divodāsa; he also mentions, though he does not definitely adopt, the suggestion of Brunnhofer that the SṚŪjayas are to be compared with the Σαράγγαι<sup>16</sup> of the Greeks, and to be located in Drangiana. Zimmer<sup>17</sup> is inclined to locate them on the upper Indus; but it is difficult to decide definitely in favour of any particular location. They may well have been a good deal farther east than the Indus, since their allies, the Tṛtsus, were in the Madhyadeśa, and were certainly absorbed in the Kurus.

Of the history of this clan we have one notice.<sup>18</sup> They expelled Duṣṭarītu Paumsāyana, one of their kings, from the hereditary monarchy—of ten generations—and also drove out Revottaras Pāṭava Cākra Sthapati, probably his minister, who, however, succeeded in effecting the restoration of the king, despite the opposition of the Kuru prince, Balhika Prātipya. Very probably this Kuru prince may have been at the bottom of the movement which led to the expulsion of the king and his minister. But the restoration of the king can

These notices are inadequate to identify the plant. It has been held<sup>15</sup> to be the Sarcostemma viminalis or the Asclepias acida (= Sarcostemma brevistigma). Roth<sup>16</sup> held that the Sarcostemma acidum more nearly met the requirements of the case. Watt<sup>17</sup> suggested the Afghan grape as the real Soma, and Rice<sup>18</sup> thought a sugar-cane might be meant, while Max Müller and Rājendralāla Mitra suggested that the juice was used as an ingredient in a kind of beer—i.e., that the Soma plant was a species of hop. Hillebrandt<sup>19</sup> considers that neither hops nor the grape can explain the references to Soma. It is very probable that the plant cannot now be identified.<sup>20</sup>

In the Yajurveda<sup>21</sup> the plant is purchased ere it is pressed. Hillebrandt<sup>22</sup> considers that the sale must be assumed for the Rigveda. It grew on a mountain, and could not be obtained by ordinary people: perhaps some special tribe or prince owned it, like the Kikaṭas.<sup>23</sup> As it stands, the ritual performance is clearly an acquisition of the Soma from the Gandharvas (represented by a Śūdra), a ritual imitation of the action which may have been one of the sources of the drama. Owing to the difficulty of obtaining the real plant from a great distance, several substitutes were allowed in the Brāhmaṇa period.<sup>24</sup>

The plant was prepared for use by being pounded with stones or in a mortar. The former was the normal method of procedure, appearing in the Rigveda as the usual one. The stones are called grāvan<sup>25</sup> or adri,<sup>26</sup> and were, of course, held in the hands.<sup>27</sup> The plant was laid on boards one beside the other (Adhiṣavana), and, according at least to the later ritual,<sup>28</sup> a hole was dug below, so that the pounding of the plant by means of the stones resulted in a loud noise, doubtless a prophylactic against demoniac influences.

The plant was placed on a skin and on the Vedi<sup>29</sup>—which was no longer done in the later ritual—Dhiṣaṇā in some passages denoting the Vedi.<sup>30</sup>

Camū denotes the vessel used for the offering to the god,<sup>32</sup> Kalaśa and Camasa those used for the priests to drink from. Sometimes<sup>33</sup> the Camū denotes the mortar and pestle. Perhaps the vessel was so called because of its mortar-like shape.

Apparently the plant was sometimes steeped in water to increase its yield of juice.<sup>42</sup>

It is not possible to describe exactly the details of the process of pressing the Soma as practised in the Rigveda. It was certainly purified by being pressed through a sieve<sup>43</sup> (Pavitra). The Soma was then used unmixed (śukra,<sup>44</sup> śuci)<sup>45</sup> for Indra and Vāyu, but the Kāṇvas seem to have dropped this usage.<sup>46</sup> The juice is described as brown (babhru),<sup>47</sup> tawny (hari),<sup>48</sup> or ruddy (aruṇa),<sup>49</sup> and as having a fragrant smell,<sup>50</sup> at least as a rule.<sup>51</sup>

Soma was mixed with milk (Gavāśir),<sup>52</sup> curd or sour milk (Dadhyaśir),<sup>53</sup> or grain (Yavāśir).<sup>54</sup> The admixtures are <sup>39</sup> Rv. ii. 14, 9; ix. 66, 9, etc. The word can mean both the vessel into which the Soma was poured after preparation, and the vessel from which it was offered to the gods.

<sup>40</sup> Rv. ix. 15, 7; 33, 2, etc. The word, having no definite sense, can denote any of the vessels. The camū, on the other hand, was the cup for the gods, the kalaśa that for the priests (later it was also used as=kośa, when camasa had replaced kalaśa as cup for the priests; Hillebrandt, i, 187).

<sup>42</sup> This process is technically called āpyāyana, 'causing to swell.' Cf. Rv. ix. 74, 9; Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā, iv. 5, 5. The exact nature and extent of this process is quite uncertain; Hillebrandt, 193-195; Eggeling, Sacred Books of the East, 26, xxvi.

<sup>43</sup> Whether the later practice of purification by means of shoots held in the hands was known to the Rigveda is uncertain, since ii. 14, 8; ix. 71, 3, are quite indecisive. For the various terms used to designate the sieve, see Pavitra.

<sup>46</sup> Cf. Rv. viii. 2, 5. 9. 10. 28, etc. The Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā, iv. 7, 4, disapproves of the unmixed Soma. Possibly Hillebrandt, i, 207, 208, may be right in thinking that the Kāṇvas had to lay special stress on the use of the mixtures, because they used a plant which was deficient in the true Soma character.

This passage has been relied on by Eggeling, op. cit., 26, xxv, as a confirmation of the later description, in a medical work, of the plant as ill-smelling. But this plant may have been a different one from that used in Vedic times. The smell may have been due to a substitute being used, or to the genuine plant, brought from a distance, being old and withered.

The adjective tīvra<sup>64</sup> denotes the 'pungent' flavour of Soma when so mixed. The Soma shoots, after the juice has been pressed out, are denoted by ṛjīṣa, 'residue.'<sup>65</sup>

It seems probable that in some cases honey was mixed with Soma: perhaps the kośa madhu-ścut, 'the pail distilling sweetness,' was used for the mixing.<sup>66</sup> It seems doubtful if Surā was ever so mixed.<sup>67</sup>

There were three pressings a day of Soma, as opposed to the two of the Avesta.<sup>68</sup> The evening pressing was specially connected with the Ṛbhus, the midday with Indra, the morning with Agni, but the ritual shows that many other gods also had their share.<sup>69</sup> The drinker of Soma and the non-drinker are sharply discriminated in the texts.<sup>70</sup> Localities where Soma was consumed were Ārjika, Pastyāvanta, Śaryānāvanta, Suśomā, the territory of the Pañcajanāḥ or 'five peoples,' and so on.<sup>71</sup> The effects of Soma in exhilarating and exciting the drinkers are often alluded to.<sup>72</sup>

Many famous Soma offerers are mentioned: Atri, v. 51, 8; 72, 1; viii. 42, 5; Śaryāta, i. 51, 12; iii. 51, 7; Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā, vii. 35; Śiṣṭas, viii. 53, 4, etc.; Turvaśa Yadu, viii. 45, 27; Samvarta Krśa, viii. 54, 2; Nipātithi, Medhyātithi, Puṣṭigu, Sruṣṭigu, viii. 51, 1, etc. The ritual lays stress on the need of continuity in Soma-drinking in a family: Taittirīya Saṃhitā, ii. 1, 5, 5 et seq.; Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā, ii. 5, 5, etc.

It is difficult to decide if Soma was ever a popular, as opposed to a hieratic drink. The evidence for its actual popularity is very slight,<sup>73</sup> and not decisive.

<sup>71</sup> See s.v.; Hillebrandt, I, 125-143. It is possible that Soma may have grown on the mountains to the north of Madhyadeśa, whatever may have been its original home, on which cf. Roth, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, 38, 134 et seq.

<sup>72</sup> See Rv. viii. 48. It was equally prized in Avestic times. It is, however, seldom spoken of as giving the priests pleasure: Rv. i. 91, 13; viii. 2, 12; x. 167, 3. There are many references to sickness caused by it (Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā, ii. 2, 13 etc.): The Sautrāmaṇī was a rite designed to expiate the ill caused by vomiting Soma as Indra had done: Taittiriya Saṃhitā, ii. 3, 2, 5. 6; Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, v. 5, 4, 9; xii. 7, 1, 11. The name of the rite is already found in Av. vii. 3, 2, and the rite itself is no doubt older (see also Viṣṭu-cikā). This fact tells in favour of the traditional identification of the plant, for the medical passage quoted by Max Müller refers to its producing vomiting. See also Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 275; Rv. i. 91, 13; ii. 18, 3; viii. 2, 12; 17, 6; 48, 12. Perhaps Vamra in i. 112, 15, got his name thence.

Strī is the ordinary word in poetry and prose for 'woman,' without special reference to her as a wife or as a maiden. Nārī has the same sense, but disappears in later prose, while Gnā refers only to the wives of the gods, and Yoṣit, with its cognate words, denotes the young woman as ripe for marriage.<sup>1</sup> In the Rigveda<sup>2</sup> Strī stands opposed to Pumāms, 'man,' and once to vṛṣan, 'male person'; not until the Atharvaveda<sup>3</sup> does it mean 'wife' as opposed to Patī, 'husband,' and even in the Sūtras it is sharply opposed to Jāyā.

In Vedic India by far the greater part of a woman's life was taken up in her marriage and marital relations (see Patī and Mātr). There is no trace in the Rigveda of the seclusion of women, which was practically complete in all but the earliest Epic:<sup>4</sup> the maiden may be assumed to have grown up in her father's house, enjoying free intercourse with the youth of the village, and sharing in the work of the house. Education<sup>5</sup> was not denied to them, at any rate in certain cases, for we hear in the Upaniṣads of women who could take no unimportant part in disputations on philosophical topics. Moreover, women were taught to dance and sing, which were unmanly accomplishments.<sup>6</sup> of a father the brother was looked to for aid, and that brotherless maidens were apt to be ruined, though religious terrors were believed to await the man who took advantage of their defencelessness.<sup>8</sup> Moreover, women could not take an inheritance,<sup>9</sup> and were not independent persons in the eyes of the law, whether married or not. Presumably before marriage they lived on their parents or brothers, and after that on their husbands, while in the event of their husbands predeceasing them, their relatives took the property, burdened with the necessity of maintaining the wife.<sup>10</sup> Their earnings would be appropriated by their nearest relative—usually father or brother—in the few cases in which unmarried women could earn anything, as in the case of courtezans.

Stha-pati is the name of a royal official mentioned in the Atharvaveda,<sup>1</sup> and often later.<sup>2</sup> Revottaras Cākra was the Sthapati of the exiled Duṣṭarītu Pauṃsāyana, a king of the Śrñjayas, and succeeded in restoring him to his royal dignity.<sup>3</sup> The exact sense of the term is not certain: 'governor'<sup>4</sup> is possible, but perhaps 'chief judge'<sup>5</sup> is more likely; as in the case of the early English judges, his functions may have been both executive and judicial. He is inferior in position to the king's brother.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>4</sup> In the Kātyāyana Śrauta Sūtra, i. 1, 12; Āpastamba Śrauta Sūtra, ix. 14, 12, is found Niṣāda-sthapati; perhaps 'governor of Niṣādas.' But it may also mean (cf. Weber, Indische Studien, i, 207, n.) a Niṣāda as a Sthapati; thus, little can be deduced from this passage in particular. Eggeling, Sacred Books of the East, 41, 111, renders it 'governor.' Cf. also St. Petersburg Dictionary, s.v., and Aupoditi.

Snātaka, the designation of the student 'who has taken the bath,' marking the termination of his studentship under a religious teacher, occurs in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (xii. 1, 1, 10), and repeatedly in the Sūtras. Cf. Brahmacārin.

1. Snāvanya, used in the plural, denotes particular parts of the body of a horse in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (v. 7, 23, 1).

2. Snāvanya appears to be the name of a people in the Baudhāyana Śrauta Sūtra.<sup>1</sup>

Snuṣā denotes the 'daughter-in-law' in relation primarily to her father-in-law, but also to her mother-in-law. In the latter sense the word appears in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> in the epithet su-snuṣā,

'having a good daughter-in-law,' used of Vṛṣākapāyī, while in the former it occurs in several passages, where the daughter-in-law's respect for her father-in-law is mentioned,<sup>2</sup> a respect which spirituous liquor alone causes to be violated.<sup>3</sup> See also Śvaśura and Pati.

The Aitareya Āraṇyaka<sup>12</sup> and the Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka<sup>13</sup> recognize the three forms of the Rigveda text as pratīṇṇa, nirbhuja, and ubhayam-antareṇa, denoting respectively the Saṃhitā, Pada, and Krama Pāṭhas of the Rigveda.<sup>14</sup> The same authorities<sup>15</sup> recognize the importance of the distinction of the cerebral and dental n and s, and refer<sup>16</sup> to the Māṇḍūkeyas' mode of recitation. They also discuss<sup>17</sup> Sandhi, the euphonic 'combination' of letters.

The Prātiśākhya of the several Saṃhitās develop in detail the grammatical terminology, and Yāska's Nirukta<sup>18</sup> contains a good deal of grammatical material. Sva-sara, according to the St. Petersburg Dictionary, denotes 'cattle stall,'<sup>1</sup> and more generally 'dwelling-place,' 'house,'<sup>2</sup> and then 'nest of birds.'<sup>3</sup> Geldner,<sup>4</sup> however, shows that the real sense is the 'wandering at will' of cattle, more precisely their 'grazing in the morning,'<sup>5</sup> and in the case of birds their 'early flight' from the nest,<sup>6</sup> while metaphorically it is applied first to the morning pressing of Soma and then to all three pressings.<sup>7</sup> to things not precisely so related. For example, in the Rigveda the fingers and the seasons are 'sisters,' and night is the sister of dawn, for whom, as the elder, she makes way.<sup>2</sup> The Paṇis offer to adopt Saramā as their sister;<sup>3</sup> but this use is not applied—any more than in the case of Bhrātr—to ordinary human beings.

The sister stood in a close relation to her brother. If the father was dead or feeble, the sister was dependent on her brother and on his wife, as appears from the Rigveda<sup>4</sup> and the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.<sup>5</sup> Moreover, maidens without brothers were apt to find marriage difficult, and to degenerate into Hetairai;<sup>6</sup> but it is not certain whether this was due, as Zimmer<sup>7</sup> thinks, to brothers being required to arrange marriages for orphan girls, or because sonless fathers were anxious to make their daughters Putrikās, in order that they themselves, instead of the husbands, should count the daughters' sons as their own.<sup>8</sup> See also Jāmi.

Hiraṇya in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later<sup>2</sup> denotes 'gold.' It is hardly possible to exaggerate the value attached to gold by the Vedic Indians. The metal was, it is clear, won from the bed of rivers. Hence the Indus is called 'golden'<sup>3</sup> and 'of golden stream.'<sup>4</sup> Apparently the extraction of gold from the earth was known,<sup>5</sup> and washing for gold is also recorded.<sup>6</sup>

Gold is the object of the wishes of the Vedic singer,<sup>7</sup> and golden treasures (hiraṇyāni) are mentioned as given by patrons<sup>8</sup> along with cows and horses. Gold was used for ornaments for neck and breast (Niṣka), for ear-rings (Karna-śobhana), and even for cups.<sup>9</sup> Gold is always associated with the gods.<sup>10</sup>

In the plural Hiraṇya denotes 'ornaments of gold.'<sup>11</sup>

A gold currency was evidently beginning to be known in so far as definite weights of gold are mentioned: thus a weight, aṣṭā-prūd, occurs in the Saṃhitās,<sup>12</sup> and the golden śatamāna, 'weight of a hundred (Kṛṣṇalas)' is found in the same texts.<sup>13</sup> In several passages,<sup>14</sup> moreover, hiraṇya or hiraṇyāni may mean 'pieces of gold.'

Gold is described sometimes as harita,<sup>15</sup> 'yellowish,' sometimes as rajata,<sup>16</sup> 'whitish,' when probably 'silver' is alluded to. It was obtained from the ore by smelting.<sup>17</sup> Megasthenes<sup>18</sup> bears testimony to the richness in gold of India in his time.

Hiranya-dant ('gold-toothed') Vaida ('descendant of Veda') is the name of a teacher in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (iii. 6, 3) and the Aitareya Āraṇyaka (ii. 1, 5). The name presumably refers to the use of gold to stop the teeth; see Dant.

Hiranya-nābha is the name of a Kausalya or Kosala prince, whose horse sacrifice appears to be alluded to in the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra (xvi. 9, 13). He is also referred to in the Praśna Upaniṣad (vi. 1), and may have been connected with Para Āṭṇāra. Cf. Hairanya-nābha.

Hiranya-stūpa is the name of a man in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and in the Śatapathā Brāhmaṇa.<sup>2</sup> He is called an Āṅgīrasa in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,<sup>3</sup> which credits him with the authorship of a Rigvedic hymn.<sup>4</sup> The Anukramaṇī (Index) ascribes to him several other hymns.<sup>5</sup>

Heman (used only in the locative singular) denotes 'winter' in the later Samhitās and the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>1</sup>

Hemanta, 'winter,' occurs only once in the Rigveda,<sup>1</sup> but often in the later texts.<sup>2</sup> Zimmer<sup>3</sup> is inclined to trace differences of climate in the Rigveda: he thinks that certain hymns,<sup>4</sup> which ignore winter and insist on the rains, indicate a different place and time of origin from those which refer to the snowy mountains.<sup>5</sup> It is, however, quite impossible to separate parts of the Rigveda on this basis. It is probable that that text owes its composition in the main to residents in the later Madhyadeśa; hence the references to cold and snow are rather a sign of local than of temporal differences. It is otherwise with the later expansion of the three into four seasons,

Hotṛ is the name of one of the oldest and most important priests of the Vedic ritual, the counterpart of the Zaotar of the Avestan priesthood.<sup>1</sup> The word must be derived from hu, 'sacrifice,' as was held by Aurṇavābha;<sup>2</sup> this indicates a time when the Hotṛ was at once sacrificer (the later Adhvaryu) and singer. But the functions were already clearly divided in the Rigveda, where the Hotṛ's chief duty was the recitation of the Śastras. He was also in the older period often the Purohita of the king, an office later filled by the Brahman priest.

to include all the priests except the four chief priests (cf. Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra, v. 6, 17).

Hr̥ṛḍu is a word of unknown meaning applied to Takman in the Atharvaveda.<sup>1</sup> It is variously spelled in the manuscript as hr̥ṛḍa, h̥ṛḍu, r̥ṛḍu, and so forth; the Paippalāda recension reads huṛḍu, 'ram.' Henry<sup>2</sup> has conjectured that the word is the equivalent of a proto-Semitic har̥ṛḍu, 'gold' (Assyrian huraṣu and Hebrew har̥ṛḥ), while Halévy<sup>3</sup> suggests that it may be the Greek χλωρός, 'greenish-yellow'; but both conjectures are highly improbable.<sup>4</sup> Weber<sup>5</sup> thinks 'cramp' is meant.

ADDENDA AND CORRIGENDA

Araṇī is the designation, in the Rigveda<sup>1</sup> and later,<sup>2</sup> of the two pieces of wood used in producing the sacrificial fire by friction. The upper (uttarā) and the lower (adharā) are distinguished.<sup>3</sup> The upper, in the form of a drill, is made of the hard wood of the Aśvattha,<sup>4</sup> the lower, in the form of a slab, of the soft wood of the Śamī.<sup>5</sup> The drill is twirled forcibly (sahasā)<sup>6</sup> backwards and forwards with the arms (bāhubhyām)<sup>7</sup> by means of cords (raśanābhiḥ).<sup>8</sup> The action doubtless resembled that by which butter is separated from milk in India at the present day, the same verb (math, 'twirl,' 'churn')<sup>9</sup> being used for both processes. This method of producing the sacrificial fire still survives in India. Specimens of the modern apparatus may be seen in the Indian Institute and in the Pitt-Rivers Museum at Oxford.

Aratni, 'cubit.' According to the Śulvasūtra of Baudhāyana,<sup>1</sup> this measure is equal to 24 Aṅgulas or 'finger-breadths.' The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>2</sup> also mentions 24 Aṅgulis or 'finger-breadths' as a measure, but without reference to the Aratni.<sup>3</sup>

Itihāsa.—The question of the nature of the Vedic Itihāsa has been further considered by Keith, Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, 1911, 979-995; 1912, 429-438; and by Oldenberg, Nachrichten der königlichen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen, 1911, 441-468.

Aikṣvāka. For 'Vārṣṇi' read 'Vārṣṇa.'

Kakṣa, 1, 131, should be 2. Kaṃsa, coming before Kakara, 1, 130, and after Kaṃsa, 'pot or vessel of metal,' which should be 1. Kaṃsa.

Kamboja.—For these Iranian connexions, see Kuhn, Avesta, Pehlvi and Ancient Persian Studies in Honour of the late Shams-ul-ulema Dastur Peshotanji Behramji Sanjana (Strassburg und Leipzig, 1904), 213 et seq.; Grierson, Journal of the Royal

Kāṇvī-putra, 1, 147, should come after Kāṇvāyana.

Kumāra-hārta, 1, 172, should come after Kubhra, 1, 162.

Kumala-barhis, 1, 172, should be Kulmala-barhis.

Kṛṣṇala, line 1 and note <sup>4</sup>, read 'seed' for 'berry.'

Kraivya.—For 'on the Parivakrā' read 'at Parivakrā.'

Krośa.—In note <sup>1</sup>, for 'about two miles' read '1½ miles.' See Fleet, Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, 1912, 237.

Grāma.—The phrase Grāmin, 'possessing a village,' occurs often in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (ii. 1, 3, 2; 6, 7; 2, 8, 1; 11, 1; 3, 3, 5; 9, 2), usually in connexion with various rites for acquiring a village. Since in these cases repeated mention is made of obtaining pre-eminence over Sajātas and Samānas, 'equals,' it is probable that allowance must also be made for the control over his fellow-villagers which an ambitious man could obtain (e.g., by loans), and which might end by giving him the position of a great landlord, even without the intervention of the king.

Caṇḍātaka in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (v. 2, 1, 8) and the Kātyāyana Śrauta Sūtra (xiv. 5, 3) denotes an undergarment worn by women.

Camū.—Oldenberg<sup>1</sup> considers that even in the dual the word denotes two vessels into which the Soma, often mixed with water in the Kośa and purified with the sieve, was poured, and that, in the plural, reference is made to these and other vessels into which the Soma was put at the various stages of the process. Kalaśa similarly denoted either one (sing.) or several (plur.) of the vessels, the dual not being used, since the dual of Camū was reserved for the two vessels par excellence. In the later ritual the Camūs are replaced by the Droṇa-Kalaśa and the Pūtabhṛt, which was, however, assimilated in form and material (being made of clay, not of wood) to the Ādhāvanīya, the later name of the Kośa. The main difficulty of this theory is that it is hard to explain why Kalaśa never occurs in the dual. Geldner<sup>2</sup> falls back on the older view that in Camū (dual) the two boards of the Soma press are meant.

Talava, 1, 302, should come after Tarya, 1, 301.

Dr̥ṣadvatī.—The identification of this river with the Ghaggar (Macdonell, History of Sanskrit Literature, 142) seems to be wrong. It is almost certainly the modern Chitang (which is the correct spelling according to Raverty, Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, 61, 422), or Chitrung (Oldham, Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, 25, 58; cf. the sketch map opposite p. 49). See Sarasvatī, 2, 435, note <sup>4</sup>.

Devabhāga, is also mentioned in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (vi. 6, 2, 2) as having ruined the Sṛñjayas by an error in the sacrifice, and as a contemporary of Vāsiṣṭha Sātahavya.

Nakṣatra.—In note <sup>137</sup>, 1, 424, supply 'of' before 'the criticisms made,' and in the following lines read 'Journal' and '466.'

Niṣāda.—The Niṣādas, according to the Mahābhārata (iii. 10, 538), are situated beyond Vinaśana, the 'place of disappearance' of the Sarasvatī.

Nṛmedha.—For Sumedhas read Sumedha.

Patī, 1, 489, note 145, line 7, after 'ritual' delete 'of.'

Paṣṭhavāh in the later literature appears sometimes as Prasṭhavāh: if Bloomfield's view<sup>1</sup> that Prasṭi is from pra and as, 'be,' is correct, this may be the older form. Against this, however, is to be set the constant earlier tradition.<sup>2</sup> Macdonell<sup>3</sup> connects the word with prṣṭhavāh, 'carrying on the back.'

Pratiṣṭhā.—For the succour of a fugitive offender may be compared the phrase in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (vi. 5, 6, 3; 8, 4, 5), 'men do not deliver up even one deserving death (vadhya) who has come to them for protection (prapanna).'
Cf. Paridā.

Pravarta.—The sense of 'ear-ornament' is justified by Āpastamba Śrauta Sūtra, xix. 23, 11; 24, 10. Cf. Baudhāyana Śrauta Sūtra, xiii. 31.

Prasṭi is considered by Bloomfield<sup>1</sup> to refer to a horse yoked in front to guide the team, a sense clearly occurring in some places, and to be derived from pra and as, 'be,' as in Upastī. The word is usually<sup>2</sup> considered to be connected with parśu, 'rib.'

Brahmacarya.—The later rules are exhaustively given by Glaser, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, 66, 1 et seq.

Bhaṅga-śravas is the form of a man's name found in the Kāthaka Saṃhitā (xxxviii. 12) in the parallel to the passage of the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka (vi. 5, 2), which has Bhaṅgyaśravas.

Māsa, 2, 157, note <sup>10</sup>, add: according to Taittirīya Saṃhitā, iii. 5, 1, 3, the new moon begins the month.

Yuga.—Tilak<sup>1</sup> has pressed this word into his theory of the reminiscence in the Vedas of an arctic home. He finds in it the sense of 'month,' interpreting the legend of Āditya (=the sun) as an allusion to the arctic summer of ten months, followed by a night of two, traces of which he thinks exist in the notices of the seasons. This theory is, however, most improbable, as is his explanation<sup>2</sup> of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>3</sup> reference by the theory that it portrays the various stages of the life of the Āryans.

Rājasūya.—Read 'victor' for 'victim' in line 12.

Lāhyāyana, 2, 232, should be Lāhyāyani, and the reference, iii. 3, 1, 2.

1. Varṣā-hū, 'frog' ('calling in the rains'), is one of the victims at the Aśvamedha ('horse sacrifice') in the Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā (xxiv. 38).

2. Varṣā-hū ('produced in the rains') is the name<sup>1</sup> of a plant (Boerhavia procumbens) in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (iii. 4, 10, 3).

the earlier part of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (iii. 2, 1, 23) would be the same, since its reputed author, Yājñavalkya, is connected in tradition with the East. Dr. Grierson's argument would have been stronger had the reference occurred in one of the Śaṅḍilya books.

Vātāvata and Vātāvant, 2, 284, should be read for Vātavata and Vātavant.

Vāsa.—In the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (ii. 2, 11, 4) upādhāyā-pūrvaya, as an epithet of Vāsa, appears to denote 'fringed (citrānta) according to Āpastamba Śrauta Sūtra, xix. 20, 2.

Viṣṇupākā, 2, 313, headline, for '31,' read '313.'

Vehat occurs in conjunction with Vaśā in the Kāthaka Saṃhitā (xxxviii. 10), the Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā (iii. 11, 11), the Vājasaneyī Saṃhitā (xxi. 21), and the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa (ii. 6, 18, 4).

Vairiṇa, 2, 318, should be Vīraṇa.

Vyat, 1, 523, should be Vyant.

Śamyā in the Brāhmaṇas<sup>1</sup> frequently denotes the wooden support on which the lower of the two millstones (Dr̥ṣad) is placed.

<sup>1</sup> Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, i. 6, 1, 1; Sūtra, i. 7; Āpastamba Śrauta Sūtra, Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 1, 1, 22; 2, 1, xviii. 8, 12, etc.
16; v. 2, 3, 2; Baudhāyana Śrauta

Śyāmaiajayanta, 1, 185, should be Śyāmasujayanta.

Śruṣṭi (more correctly Śnuṣṭi) Āṅgīrasa, 2, 397, should come on p. 403, before Śruṣṭigu; and Sukurīra before Sukeśin, 2, 453.

Several misprints are due to the loss of diacritical marks: thus for Ajya read Ājya, 2, 20; for Arcatka, Ārcatka, 2, 357; for Artava, Ārtava, 1, 63; for Apayā, Āpayā, 1, 218; for Amikṣā, Āmikṣā, 1, 250; for Aśumga, Āśumga, 2, 387; for Asandī, Āsandī, 2, 383; for Dirghatamas, Ādirghatamas, 1, 366; for Satapatha, Āsatapatha, 1, 18, 34, 55, 67, 111, 119, 157, 242, 291, 371, 463, 516, 523; 2, 24, 80, 220, 221, 358, 362, 433; for Srauta, Āsrauta, 1, 18, 55, 281, 282, 373; 2, 34, 71, 281, 301; for Sāṅkhāyana, Āsāṅkhāyana, 1, 257, 281, 400, 469; 2, 34, 87, 281, 383; for Sātyāyanaka, Āsātyāyanaka, i. 407; for Sāvasāyana, Āsāvasāyana, 2, 376.
